LaFayette, Ind., Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—A bomb wired to the automobile of W. F. Heidergott, Purdue University instructor, exploded when he stepped on the starter today, seriously injuring him.

Heidergott, who teaches in the practical mechanics department, told police he knew of no enemies. One side of his face was torn away by the explosion.

Physicians doubted that he could survive the injury.

His automobile was so damaged police were unable to determine how the bomb had been placed in the machine or how it had been set off.

The force of the blast was so great it tore the roof and sides from the garage.

Heidergott is 54 years old and has been a teacher at the university for 12 years.

WARM AIR STRIKES THE COLD
GROUND, PREDICTED MISTS
WOULD LIFT SHORTLY

Chicago, Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—A ground fog settled over the middle west today, suspending air mail service and compelling railroad trains and motorists to proceed with caution.

The fog interrupted flights of air mail planes from six points, but the pilots were expected to resume their trips to Chicago later in the day.

The St. Paul plane landed at Milwaukee, the San Francisco plane at Des Moines, the New York plane at Brookville, Pa., and the Dallas plane at Moline, Ill.

The Atlanta and Cincinnati planes were unreported, but were believed to be in their home hangars.

The weather bureau said the fog was caused by warm air striking cold ground and predicted the mists would lift during the morning.

SOUTH POLAR EXPEDITION DID NOT PAY WELL

REAR ADMIRAL RICHARD BYRD
STILL $110,000 IN DEBT

ALMOST DAILY RECEIVES CALL FOR AID FROM SOME OF MEN WHO WERE ON TRIP

Chicago, Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd still is $110,000 in debt from his South Polar expedition and many of his companions on the trip are finding it difficult to earn a living, the famous explorer revealed in an address before the Chicago Geographic society.

"We must get out of debt before I make any more exploration trips," Byrd said. "Hard times since our return from the Antarctic have dealt us a hard blow."

"Almost every day I receive calls for aid from some of the men who were with me down the ednaref were with me down there and I cannot turn them down."

Byrd said that returns from the motion picture, "With Byrd at the South Pole," have been small. The film, made during the expedition's stay at Little America, was hailed as a great success in the larger cities, he said, but has failed to attract crowds in smaller communities.

Fred Sweetman, 99, Oldest N.P. Conductor, Dies Today

Red Lodge, Mont., Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—Fred Sweetman, 99, oldest Northern Pacific conductor, died today. He started working for the railroad in 1870. He had gained the censure of General George A. Custer by not bucking snowbanks to the military man's idea.

GRAPE JUICE GUARANTEED TO TURN INTO WINE

MILLIONAIRE BREWERS AND BOTTLEERS IN CONVENTIONS
DISCUSS ITS SALE

GROUPS CONSIDER POSSIBLE
MODIFICATION OF THE PRO-HIBITION LAWS

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—America's millionaire brewers and bottlers met in separate conventions today to discuss, among other things, the sale of grape juice guaranteed to turn into wine and the possible modification of the prohibition laws.

The bottlers' convention was attended by delegates of firms which manufacture non-alcoholic carbonated beverages. Their business has increased remarkably since prohibition, they said.

While the soda-pop and gingerale men extolled the virtues of Volsteadism, the brewers expressed hopes for the return of beer. Here are representative statements from the two conventions:

Joseph R. Flynn of Washington, D. C., a bottler—

"Most of our convention delegates probably think prohibition is a good thing and that it will stay. Gingerale sales have increased greatly since prohibition."

Robert Windmueller of the Annheuser-Busch Brewery, St. Louis:

"Beer will be legalized before long. Every brewer in the country is ready to start pre-prohibition operations on a few days' notice."

Both brewers and bottlers declared they believed popularity of the grape juice wine will last only a few months. Even if the federal government does not stop its sale, they said, the public will not want to wait the 60-day period necessary to age the wine.

Windmueller cast a new angle on the possible modification of the prohibition laws, saying:

"A gigantic advertising campaign would be necessary to restore beer to popularity and wean the American public from the hard liquor of the speakasies."

"We have become a nation of hard liquor drinkers. Beer of at least 3.75 per cent alcoholic content will be needed, in addition to extensive public health campaigns to curb bootleg liquor drinking."

POSTOFFICE LEASES TO BE INVESTIGATED

Chicago, Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—An investigation of postoffice leases, some of which were made on an excessive rental basis according to charges, was started today by United States Senator John J. Blaine of Wisconsin.

Blaine, arriving in Chicago from Boscebel, Wis., prepared to open his senate committee inquiry late today, with at least five witnesses known to have been summoned.

Service of subpoenas on the five was started by deputy marshals yesterday. The name of only one, Jacob Kulp, Sr., head of the Jacob Kulp and company investment house, was disclosed. Kulp's firm is said to have financed the bids in rentals of 25 new postoffices.

Blaine's inquiry is expected to center on the rental terms for sub-postoffices which the postoffice department leases in Chicago.

Criticism of a St. Paul postoffice lease by Senator Gerald P. Nye of North Dakota last spring started the inquiry which Blaine heads.

CAPT. ROY W. AMMEL FETED IN PANAMA

Balboa, Canal Zone, Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—Capt. Roy W. Ammel, first aviator to make a non-stop flight from New York to the Canal Zone, was the guest of honor at a banquet given by Panama Canal Post No. 1 of the American Legion at the Miramar club last night.

Ammel did not intend to "advertise anything" on his flight, he said, but wanted to visit Panama. He was here in 1918 and was engaged by former President Augusto Leguia of Peru as chief instructor in the Peruvian air corps.

Ammel expects to start back to the United States on a non-stop flight to Chicago before the end of the week.

Denatured Alcohol Blamed for Deaths of 2 Minneapolis Men at Cottage Near Fairhaven

BANDITS HAD FAITH IN STORY OF BURIED RICHES

ARE SOUGHT TODAY FOR KILL-
ING OF 3 PERSONS ON FARM NEAR BOSCEBEL, WIS.

CAME THERE, ASKED PERMIS-SION TO HUNT, THEN SHOT DOWN FARMERS

Boscebel, Wis., Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—Bandits who placed faith in a legend of buried treasure were sought today for the killing of two persons on a lonely farm near Boscebel in a robbery attempt.

Partick Gorman, 65, and Gorman's son, Paul, 18, were killed when they resisted the robbers. Cornelius Horriggan, owner of the farm, and his brother, Stephen, were seriously wounded.

The bandits, three men and a woman, appeared at the farm yesterday afternoon and requested permission to hunt on Horriggan's land.

"Sure, you can hunt any place you wish," Horriggan replied.

After conferring among themselves, the bandits returned to the house and ordered the Horriggans and Gorman to raise their hands. All of the bandits, who appeared to be farmers, were armed.

Paul Gorman reached for a revolver in his pocket and was shot instantly. The other three men were shot when they attempted to grapple with the bandits. Although wounded, Stephen Horriggan obtained a shotgun from his room and wounded one of the bandits.

Several hours later the four bandits were believed to have passed through Mt. Sterling, Wis. A radio warning was broadcast and authorities over the state were notified.

Boscebel authorities recalled that tales of rich treasure buried on the Horriggan farm had been circulated throughout the country. Many persons were said to have dug over the farm in search of the reputed riches.

The Gormans, residents of Huron, S. D., were visiting at the Horriggan farm.

AGED 33

BARBER OFFICIAL TRIED TO ESCAPE AFTER BEING KID-
NAPED BY GANGSTERS

Cleveland, O., Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—Outbreak of a new racketeer war was feared by police today as they sought two gunmen who shot down James Pelai, 33, vice president of the United Barbers Protective Association last night when he tried to escape after being kidnaped and held prisoner for five hours.

Taken to a hospital with a bullet wound in the back, Pelai told police his attempted slayers abducted him from a restaurant and took him to a room where he was forced to reveal the name of the president, Emmanuel Beil. The gunmen then took him to Zeil's shop on the east side where the proprietor was drawn outside for a conversation. During the discussion, Pelai attempted to flee but was brought down with a bullet in his back. The gunmen fled.

They were accused of the shooting and kidnaping of a reprisal for having been discharged from the "union" for cutting prices.

Attempted Holdup Checked by Citizens Vigilante Group

Marland, Okla., Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—An unidentified man was killed and his companion was wounded today when they attempted to hold up the Marland State bank here.

THERE IS A POOR MARKET FOR CHURCHES

Kansas City, Mo., Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—There's a poor market for churches. Complete with pews, pulpit, echoes and "soft religious light" there is no sale for them, the trustees of the Roanoke Presbyterian church here have discovered.

The congregation of the church has a new home and had counted on selling the old structure to help pay for the new. Yesterday an auction was staged, a leather-lunged colonel shouting the merits of the property to the seventy-five who gathered.

When it was all over one bid had been received, and it was too low to be accepted.

St. Paul, Minn., Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—A petition charging Harry E. Burns, Benton county attorney, with bribery, malfeasance and non-feasance of office was presented to Governor Theodore Christianson today by J. F. Mushel.

The petition asked that Burns be removed as Benton county attorney. The governor took no action in the petition and referred it to Attorney General Henry N. Benson, for an opinion as to the petition's legality and its form.

Burns was re-elected last week by a majority of 400 votes over Emory W. Swenson of Foley.

That slot machines were allowed to operate in Benton county.

That alleged solicitations had been made in liquor defendants' cases which were in federal courts.

Dr. H. J. Kern, Stearns county coroner, examined the two bodies last night after they were found in a cottage at Lake Maria, near Fairhaven, some 20 miles south of here. He said the men had died from poison alcohol and that an autopsy would be necessary.

The bodies were to be shipped back to Minneapolis today.

A jug of the poison liquor was found in the cottage. Friends of theirs found the dead men when they arrived to visit them. Indications were they had been dead since the week-end. Strum's body was on the floor while Rudnindin's was in bed.

GRAIN AND GRAIN PRODUCTS ARE AFFECTED

I. C. C. ACTION MAY BE TAKEN
TO FEDERAL COURTS FOR REVIEW

RAILROADS CLAIM ADEQUATE
TRANSPORTATION WILL BE
"SERIOUSLY MENACED"

Washington, Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—Western railroads may appeal to the federal courts against the decision of the interstate commerce commission reducing rates on grain and grain products, which the railroads have sought to modify.

Such action was indicated today as result of the commission's refusal yesterday to modify the rates and rehear the case railroads claim the continuation of adequate transportation will be "seriously menaced" by the new rate reductions and the loss of revenue they will cause.

The request for reopening the case which the commission denied was made by virtually every western road on the ground when the new rates would result in an aggregate annual revenue loss of between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000.

The new rates were for the most part reductions of previous rates. They were in line with recommendations of the Hock-Smith resolution passed by congress to place agriculture on a more equal footing with industry.

In connection with the belief that the carriers would appeal the commission's decision, it was recalled that in the decisionous freight case in which similar reductions were ordered the United States supreme court set aside the new rates as being without the authority of law.

4 MEN TRY TO TAKE THEIR LIVES ARMISTICE DAY

THREE WERE SUCCESSFUL IN
ATTEMPTS AT SUICIDE IN DENVER

TWO USED GUNS AND THE THIRD MAN TOOK DOSE OF POISON

Denver, Colo., Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—Four men attempted to take their own lives in Denver Armistice Day. Three were successful.

The body of an unidentified man was found in a clump of trees in City Park. A revolver lay a few feet away which he had used to send a bullet through his heart.

All identification marks had been carefully removed.

Joseph Bischer, 43, drank poison at his home.

Edwin R. Carter, 50, an invalid since birth, used a gun to destroy his life.

Ben Rebis, 36, police said, tried to burn himself to death by setting fire to his automobile. A squad of police and firemen arrived in time to prevent an alleged attempt at suicide.

CLARA BOW WANTS A NEW SECRETARY

ONE WHO CAN RULE WITH IRON
HAND THE TEMPESTUOUS
SCREEN STAR

Hollywood, Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—Clara Bow wants a new secretary—a secretary who can rule with an iron hand the tempestuous titan-haired screen star and keep her out of hot water.

For Clara has fired her constant companion and secretary, Daisy Devoe, after several days of argument.

Daisy, young and pretty herself, left Clara's household to live with a sister recently separated from her husband. And that's where the rub lies. Clara didn't want to lose her companion. At least, that's Daisy's explanation.

It was rumored that Clara discharged Daisy for signing her Calvea gambling checks, totaling $13,800. Clara refused to be interviewed on the subject, referring all questions to her attorney, W. I. Gilbert.

Gilbert exploded that report with the reminder that Clara herself signed those now famous checks, and that Daisy, in her position of secretary, merely had countersigned the largest, for $7,800.

The screen star was quite perturbed today to find herself again in the headlines and indignantly denied herself to interviewers.

"I have nothing to say," she said. "Every time I say anything, I get in trouble. See my attorney."

GRAIN PRODUCTS ARE AFFECTED

I. C. C. ACTION MAY BE TAKEN
TO FEDERAL COURTS FOR REVIEW

RAILROADS CLAIM ADEQUATE
TRANSPORTATION WILL BE
"SERIOUSLY MENACED"

Washington, Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—Western railroads may appeal to the federal courts against the decision of the interstate commerce commission reducing rates on grain and grain products, which the railroads have sought to modify.

Such action was indicated today as result of the commission's refusal yesterday to modify the rates and re-hear the case railroads claim the continuation of adequate transportation will be "seriously menaced" by the new rate reductions and the loss of revenue they will cause.

The request for reopening the case which the commission denied was made by virtually every western road on the ground when the new rates would result in an aggregate annual revenue loss of between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000.

The new rates were for the most part reductions of previous rates. They were in line with recommendations of the Hock-Smith resolution passed by congress to place agriculture on a more equal footing with industry.

In connection with the belief that the carriers would appeal the commission's decision, it was recalled that in the decision freight case in which similar reductions were ordered the United States supreme court set aside the new rates as being without the authority of law.

4 MEN TRY TO TAKE THEIR LIVES
ARMISTICE DAY

THREE WERE SUCCESSFUL IN
ATTEMPTS AT SUICIDE IN DENVER

Denver, Colo., Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—Four men attempted to take their own lives in Denver Armistice Day. Three were successful.

The body of an unidentified man was found in a clump of trees in City Park. A revolver lay a few feet away which he had used to send a bullet through his heart.

All identification marks had been carefully removed.

Joseph Bischer, 43, drank poison at his home.

Edwin R. Carter, 50, an invalid since birth, used a gun to destroy his life.

Ben Rebs, 36, police said, tried to burn himself to death by setting fire to his automobile. A squad of police and firemen arrived in time to prevent an alleged attempt at suicide.

CLARA BOW WANTS A NEW SECRETARY

ONE WHO CAN RULE WITH IRON
HAND THE TEMPESTUOUS
SCREEN STAR

Hollywood, Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—Clara Bow wants a new secretary—a secretary who can rule with an iron hand the tempestuous titian-haired screen star and keep her out of hot water.

For Clara has fired her constant companion and secretary, Daisy Devore, after several days of argument.

Daisy, young and pretty herself, left Clara's household to live with a sister recently separated from her husband. And that's where the rub lies. Clara didn't want to lose her companion.

At least, that's Daisy's explanation. It was rumored that Clara discharged Daisy for signing her Calveva gambling checks, totaling $13,800. Clara refused to be interviewed on the subject, referring all questions to her attorney, W. I. Gilbert.

Gilbert exploded that report with the reminder that Clara herself signed those now famous checks, and that Daisy, in her position of secretary, merely had countersigned the largest, for $7,800.

The screen star was quite perturbed today to find herself again in the headlines and indignantly denied herself to interviewers.

"I have nothing to say," she said. "Every time I say anything, I get in trouble. See my attorney."

His Golden Wedding

By CHARLES SLOAN REID

(Copyright.)

OLD Silas Elwell walked with a long staff. His bent form showed a decided hump on his back, setting his head well forward on his shoulders. He wore a flowing gray beard, and the hair on his head was almost white. Evidently the village was taking a holiday. Old Silas stopped occasionally to gaze about him, wondering what unusual thing was taking place in Morgantown. The main store of the town was closed, and tucked against the front door was a sign:

Taking one of the most important holidays of my life.—Alec Stonecipher.

"I reckon Stonecipher's gone a fishin'," commented Silas to himself, as he slowly spelled out the words of the sign. "Well, by heck! I wanted to buy a pair of wool cards, an' I reckon Stonecipher's is the only store in town as has 'em."

Elwell's legs had grown wobbly from age; and the walk from the mountain, a distance of twelve miles, had tired him. He sat down upon the doorstep in front of Stonecipher's store. A few villagers passed him with a nod or a word of greeting.

"Hello, Uncle Silas; ain't a-wantin' to get into the store, are yuh?" It was Stonecipher's clerk who asked the question.

Silas looked up. "Well, I did want to get in," Elwell admitted; "but seein' as how it was closed, I jest set down here to rest."

"Stonecipher said as how he had wouldn't sell his daddy, if he had one, anything out o' this store today—he's takin' a holiday."

"So I see'd by the printin' up thar. What's he doin' so important?"

"Why, this here's Stonecipher's golden weddin' day; an' him an' the old lady's havin' a big dinner—a roasted pig, an' a sheep's head with dumplin's an' all the fixin's."

"Do tell! An' what does the golden weddin' be?"

"Why, don't you know? When a couple's been married fifty year, to the very day, an' both of 'em still kickin', why they call thet their golden weddin' day."

Silas Elwell suddenly stood erect, or as nearly so as his bent form would allow. "What day o' the month is this, Galbreath?"

"It's Saturday, the twenty-third o' May. But I'm in on the weddin' today, an' I must hurry along."

Silas Elwell sat down again. Presently he wiped two tears from his eyes. Then he thrust his hand into his trousers' pocket.

"I reckon I'll look around a bit," he said to himself.

Getting to his feet once more he started down the street. Two or three shops were not observing Stonecipher's wedding day, although he was the chief man of the town. Into one of these he betook himself and at length came out and turned his footsteps directly toward the county jail, two blocks away. Reaching the sheriff's office Silas came to the object of his visit without delay.

"Sheriff," he began, "you an' me's been good friends a long time?"

"Yes; we have, Uncle Silas," the sheriff agreed.

"Voted for yuh, clean, ever' time yuh run?"

"I know you have."

"Sheriff, I want to borrow ten dollars. I got a yearlin' thet's worth fifteen; an' I'll give ye a mortgage agin the yearlin'."

"All right, Uncle Silas; you shall have it. Come over to the magistrate's an' we'll fix up the papers."

The sheriff led the way; and soon Elwell's quivering hand was making a cipher at the bottom of a legal form, which stood for his signature.

"Yuh're shore a friend o' mine, Sheriff."

"Don't mention it, Uncle Silas."

Silas turned away. Twenty minutes later he had begun the long journey back home. His step was more elastic, and he held his head just a little higher than usual. It was almost sunset when Silas reached the crest of the ridge on which his cabin stood. One hand he had carried in his trousers' pocket most of the way from town. It clasped a small package which contained the sole purchase for the day.

Susan Elwell was busy with her meat broiling, and called to Silas from the lean-to at the back. "Did yuh get them cards, Silas?"

"No, Susan; I didn't. Stonecipher's was closed."

"For the land sakes, what for?"

"He was takin' a holiday."

"Lord, them rich kind kin have holidays, I reckon."

After supper Susan sat at one side of the wide hearth, knitting, while Elwell sat at the opposite side, half dreaming. Only the light from a fagot in the fireplace sent a dull glow throughout the room. Presently Silas was on his knees before Susan.

"Lord, Silas," she exclaimed, "what has gone wrong?"

"Nothin'. Let loose yuh knittin' for a minute, Susan."

In a moment trembling fingers and a gnarled thumb were slipping a plain gold band over the end of a shriveled third finger. "It's the ring I promised ye fifty year ago come this night, Susan. It's our golden weddin', sweet-heart—same as Stonecipher's, you member?"

"Lord he's yore time, Silas!" came from Susan's lips, and a sob modulated her tones.

Lesson Learned

It's really very little use. There's three-and-a-half-year-old Joan. Joan has been repeatedly warned not to play with strange pups—"Baby mustn't play with doggie," they tell her over and over again, "doggie bite baby." The other day Joan escaped from her nurse for a few minutes and was heard making overtures to a rowdy Scotch terrier—"Come, doggie," said Joan, "come, doggie, bite baby!"

His Golden Wedding

By CHARLES SLOAN REID

(Copyright.)

OLD Silas Elwell walked with a long staff. His bent form showed a decided hump on his back, setting his head well forward on his shoulders. He wore a flowing gray beard, and the hair on his head was almost white. Evidently the village was taking a holiday. Old Silas stopped occasionally to gaze about him, wondering what unusual thing was taking place in Morgantown. The main street of the town was closed, and tacked against the front door was a sign:

Taking one of the most important holidays of my life.—Alec Stonecipher.

"I reckon Stonecipher's gone a fishin'," commented Silas to himself, as he slowly spelled out the words of the sign. "Well, by heck! I wanted to buy a pair of wool cards, an' I reckon Stonecipher's is the only store in town as has 'em."

Elwell's legs had grown wobbly from age; and the walk from the mountain, a distance of twelve miles, had tired him. He sat down upon the doorstep in front of Stonecipher's store. A few villagers passed him with a nod or a word of greeting.

"Hello, Uncle Silas; ain't a-wantin' to get into the store, are yuh?" It was Stonecipher's clerk who asked the question.

Silas looked up. "Well, I did want to get in," Elwell admitted; "but seein' as how it was closed, I jest set down here to rest."

"Stonecipher said as how he had wouldn't sell his daddy, if he had one, anythin' out o' this store today—he's takin' a holiday."

"So I see'd by the printin' up there. What's he doin' so important?"

"Why, this here's Stonecipher's golden weddin' day; an' him an' the old lady's havin' a big dinner—a roastin' pig, an' a sheep's head with dumplin's an' all the fixin's."

"Do tell! An' what does the golden weddin' be?"

"Why, don't you know? When a couple's been married fifty year, to the very day, an' both of 'em still kickin', why they call that their golden weddin' day."

Silas Elwell suddenly stood erect, or as nearly so as his bent form would allow. "What day o' the month is this, Galbreath?"

"Hit's Saturday, the twenty-third o' May. But I'm in on the weddin' today, an' I must hurry along."

Silas Elwell sat down again. Presently he wiped two tears from his eyes. Then he thrust his hand into his trousers' pocket.

"I reckon I'll look around a bit," he said to himself.

Getting to his feet once more he started down the street. Two or three shops were not observing Stonecipher's wedding day, although he was the chief man of the town. Into one of these he betook himself and at length came out and turned his footsteps directly toward the county jail, two blocks away. Reaching the sheriff's office Silas came to the object of his visit without delay.

"Sheriff," he began, "you an' me's been good friends a long time?"

"Yes; we have, Uncle Silas," the sheriff agreed.

"Voted for yuh, clean, ever' time yuh run?"

"I know you have."

"Sheriff, I want to borrow ten dollars. I got a yearlin' thet's worth fifteen; an' I'll give ye a mortgage agin the yearlin'."

"All right, Uncle Silas; you shall have it. Come over to the magistrate's an' we'll fix up the papers."

The sheriff led the way; and soon Elwell's quivering hand was making a cipher at the bottom of a legal form, which stood for his signature. "Yuh're shore a friend o' mine, Sheriff."

"Don't mention it, Uncle Silas."

Silas turned away. Twenty minutes later he had begun the long journey back home. His step was more elastic, and he held his head just a little higher than usual. It was almost sunset when Silas reached the crest of the ridge on which his cabin stood. One hand he had carried in his trousers' pocket most of the way from town. It clapped a small package which contained the sole purchase for the day.

Susan Elwell was busy with her meat broiling, and called to Silas from the lean-to at the back. "Did yuh get them cards, Silas?"

"No, Susan; I didn't. Stonecipher's was closed."

"For the land sakes, what for?"

"He was takin' a holiday."

"Lord, them rich kind kin have holidays, I reckon."

After supper Susan sat at one side of the wide hearth, knitting, while Elwell sat at the opposite side, half dreaming. Only the light from a tapers in the fireplace sent a dull glow throughout the room. Presently Silas was on his knees before Susan.

"Lord, Silas," she exclaimed, "what has gone wrong?"

"Nothin'. Let loose yuh'r knittin' for a minute, Susan."

In a moment trembling fingers and a gaunt thumb were slipping a plain gold band over the end of a shriveled third finger. "It's the ring I promised ye fifty year ago come this night, Susan. It's our golden weddin', sweet-heart—same as Stonecipher's, you member?"

"Lord he's yore time, Silas!" came from Susan's lips, and a sob modulated her tones.

Lesson Learned

It's really very little use. There's three-and-a-half-year-old Joan. Joan has been repeatedly warned not to play with strange pups—"Baby mustn't play with doggie," they tell her over and over again, "doggie bite baby—". The other day Joan escaped from her nurse for a few minutes and was heard making overtures to a rowdy Scotch terrier—"Come, doggie," said Joan, "come, doggie, bite baby!"

EINSTEIN IS TO ENGAGE IN A SPECIAL RESEARCH

ACCEPTS INVITATION TO GO TO
MOUNT WILSON OBSERVATORY, PASADENA

SAILS FOR AMERICA LATE IN
NOVEMBER, TO SPEND 3
MONTHS HERE

By FREDRICK KUH
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
Berlin, Nov. 12.—Prof. Albert Einstein, famous scientist who was named by George Bernard Shaw as one of the eight great "makers of universe" in history, has accepted an invitation to undertake special research work at Mount Wilson observatory, at Pasadena, California. He will spend three months in America.

Einstein expects to sail for the United States late in November. He will travel strictly incognito, the name of the ship on which he will be a passenger will be kept secret, and he will remain in his cabin when the ship calls at New York on its way to California.

Einstein will be accompanied by his wife, an assistant named Dr. Meyer, and a woman secretary. Secrecy will be maintained regarding his plans so that he may have a complete rest on the voyage and avoid reporters, photographers, special interviewers, hosts of curious folks and many others who make up the crowds which the shy scientist dreads.

It was considered likely that Einstein would meet Prof. Albert Abraham Michelson on his visit to the west coast of the United States. Michelson, head of the department of physics at the University of Chicago, has devoted most of his life to the measuring of the speed of light and now is preparing for important tests on a ranch near Santa Ana, Calif., which is near the locality where Einstein will make his headquarters.

A steel vacuum tube one mile long will be used in the experiments and is expected to reduce the possibility of error to a minimum.

It was understood that the invitation for Einstein to visit the United States was extended by the Carnegie Institute in Washington, but even Einstein's intimate friends said they had no definite information on this subject. The presence of Prof. Michelson in California and the fact that he was expected to be nearing the climax of his experiments at about the time Einstein was due to arrive there led some quarters to believe that the University of Chicago might have been influential in persuading Einstein to make the voyage to America.

Einstein is expected to continue work on his famous unified field theory at Mount Wilson, as well as to indulge in new experiments. Despite the strict secrecy surrounding his plans, his neighbors in Caputh, a Berlin suburb, learned that he was delighted with the prospects of the American trip, if he could be shielded from crowds.

Einstein told a friend that he looked forward with great interest to being able to pursue his scientific labors in so perfect an observatory as that of Mount Wilson. It is understood that he will remain in the United States for three months.

He has been in bad health, due chiefly to overwork, and the invitation to visit America has been delayed for three years for that reason.

ANCIENT WAR CRUISER ADRIFT

8 MEN ABOARD MISSOULA, HAS
STEERING GEAR DIS-
ORGANIZED

Eureka, Cal., Nov. 12.—(UP)—Radio advices received at the Cable Bluff naval radio station today said that the United States cruiser Missoula, adrift for the second time within a week, had been recaptured after an all night search through the fog.

The cutter Saranac found the derelict cruiser and after turning it over to the tug Roosevelt, returned to port at Eureka, the advices said.

Eureka, Cal., Nov. 12.—With eight men on board and its steering apparatus completely disorganized, the ancient war cruiser Missoula was adrift off the fog-bound coast of northern California today, for the second time in the past week.

The vessel broke away from the coast guard cutter Saranac yesterday when a cable used as a tow line snapped. The Saranac had assumed responsibility for the old hulk when the same accident occurred Saturday as the Roosevelt was pulling the Missoula from Bremerton to Oakland.

Before the Saranac could turn back to cast another line on board, the Missoula was lost in the thick fog that has caused so much distress during the past few days.

As the entire engine plant had been removed, those on board the Missoula were forced to steer by means of a hand gear, utterly inadequate in the rough seas at present prevailing.

While the Saranac cruised around in the hope of sighting the battered old vessel, other ships in the vicinity were notified to keep a sharp watch for the craft.

Embroidery Is to Play Part in Winter Fashions
Plans are abroad for a very glittering winter for the feminine fashions. This announcement comes via the newly arrived models from the French capital, for they are scintillating objects for admiration. Sequins, strass, crystal, bugles and beads are all used to effectively pattern afternoon frocks of formal attitude and to characterize the late evening mode.

The prevailing idea seems to be to elaborate models with embroidery though to handle the matter of ornamentation discreetly. That is, embroidery appears in sections as, for instance, on a bolero or a decorative section over the hips suggesting a yoke accentuating the contours of the body and the prevailing molded silhouette. The daytime dress centers interest in the sleeves. Beaded embroidered batiste or net insets, full and loose, are often imposed at the lower part of the sleeve. Also beaded collars in both white and pastel shades provide the touch of daintiness so flattering in lingerie neckwear.

Black Still Dominates Informal Frock Mode

There is no question that for the semi-formal frock black is completely dominating. One may go so far as to say that it has very little competition, except in the new metals. Black velvets in long-skirted, graceful afternoon and dinner frocks—their name is legion; while chiffons, laces and nets add generously to this group in black.

Long-Sleeved Sweaters of Finest Fluffy Wool

Long-sleeved V-neck sweaters with pockets, or short-sleeved young-looking slip-ons, as well as cardigans which may go alone or be worn with matching tuck-ins, are the finest, fluffiest wool, particularly alluring in the soft, powdery pastels. These are to be worn with skirts of silk or of wool as preferable.

'BUY NOW' CAMPAIGN GAINING MOMENTUM

MOTION PICTURE THEATRE MEN PLEDGE SUPPORT TO THE CAMPAIGN

Philadelphia, Nov. 12.—(UP)—Steps have been taken to enlist the aid of President Hoover in the "buy now" campaign designed for the relief of unemployment, the delegates to the eleventh annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America were told at their closing session here today.

The theatre owners pledged their support to the campaign.

A committee of the organization, headed by David Barrist, local exhibitor, has been in communication with George Akerson, the president's secretary, who promised to bring the campaign before Mr. Hoover at the first opportunity. Barrist told the delegates.

M. A. Lightman, of Memphis, Tenn., was re-elected president of the organization today.

The following regional vice presidents were named:

Charles W. Picquet, North Carolina; R. R. Bichele, Kansas; Harry Arthur, Samuel Dembrow and Frank C. Walker, all of New York.

J. Emanuel, of Pennsylvania, was re-elected treasurer, and M. J. O'Toole, of Scranton, was re-elected secretary. Fred Wehrenberg, of Missouri, was named chairman of the board of directors.

Mayor Thompson's Scheme Receives Many Rebuffs

Chicago, Nov. 12.—(UP)—Mayor William Hale Thompson received only rebuffs today for his scheme of doubling Chicago business by means of $1,000,000 in prizes for purchases.

Craig B. Hazelwood, vice president of the First National bank and chairman of the Metropolitan Trade committee of the Association of Commerce, condemned the mayor's plan, conceived as he was recuperating in the Passavant hospital after an appendicitis operation.

"This is no time to stir up thoughtless buying," said Hazelwood. "Prize plans or any other flag waving method of buyer stimulation can, on their very nature, be only temporary in their effect."

When Thompson announced his plan yesterday he said he would see to it that the prize money of $1,000,000 was raised.

"There are 120,000,000 people in this country who have to do Christmas shopping some place and we can get them to do it here," the mayor asserted.

Charge Five Men With Looting Steubenville, Ohio, Postoffice

Dayton, O., Nov. 12.—(UP)—The federal grand jury here today returned indictments charging five men with looting the Steubenville, Ohio, postoffice of $35,000 on Nov. 11, 1928.

Those indicted were James J. O'Neill, Eli M. Stewart and Benson Grobes, all under arrest in New Jersey; Ed C. Webb, under arrest in Toledo, and a fifth man whose name was not revealed.

Two other men indicted were Fred J. Lippman and Raymond E. Fey, both of Milwaukee. They were accused of forging and cashing more than 150 federal money orders in 16 different cities.

STOWAWAY WAS ABOARD VESSEL WHEN IT FOUNDERED

Eureka, Calif., Nov. 12.—(UP)—A youthful stowaway, working his passage from Eureka to San Francisco, was aboard the schooner Brooklyn when it foundered off Humboldt Bay, it was disclosed today by Jorgen Greve, rescued mate of the ill fated craft.

Greve's disclosure was the first intimation that there were more than the ship's crew of 18 aboard at the time of the disaster.

This revelation, added to the miraculous rescue of Greve, started a new search off the northern coast for other possible survivors of the Brooklyn—survivors who, as in Greve's case, might be clinging to floating bits of wreckage, too exhausted to make their way ashore.

"I don't know the young chap's name," Greve told Major Charles Faik, public health doctor who was attending him at St. Joseph's hospital here, where he was taken late Tuesday afternoon.

Hot air is lighter than cold air. The latter is denser, and therefore weighs more. Hot air carries more water vapor than cold air. The amount of moisture necessary to produce saturation increases rapidly with the increase of temperature.

Thinks Beer Will Be Legalized Under Local Option Shortly

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 12.—(UP)—Senator Millard E. Tydings of Maryland, chairman of the democratic senatorial campaign committee, expressed the belief today that beer will be legalized under local option within the next four years.

He gave this opinion shortly before he delivered an address before the American bottlers of carbonated beverages.

The senator said he did not anticipate serious opposition to a move to change prohibition in view of what he regarded as sentiment overwhelmingly in favor of prohibition repeal.

"When beer does return it will be in the form of local option," he said. "Under this system states that want beer can have it. Those that are dry can remain that way. I don't think there will be a return of the old time saloon. If we could get that idea to the people the old time saloon would be obsolete."

EINSTEIN IS TO ENGAGE IN A SPECIAL RESEARCH

ACCEPTS INVITATION TO GO TO
MOUNT WILSON OBSERVATORY, PASADENA

SAILS FOR AMERICA LATE IN
NOVEMBER, TO SPEND 3
MONTHS HERE

By FREDRICK KUH
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
Berlin, Nov. 12.—Prof. Albert Einstein, famous scientist who was named by George Bernard Shaw as one of the eight great "makers of universe" in history, has accepted an invitation to undertake special research work at Mount Wilson observatory, at Pasadena, California. He will spend three months in America.

Einstein expects to sail for the United States late in November. He will travel strictly incognito, the name of the ship on which he will be a passenger will be kept secret, and he will remain in his cabin when the ship calls at New York on its way to California.

Einstein will be accompanied by his wife, an assistant named Dr. Meyer, and a woman secretary. Secrecy will be maintained regarding his plans so that he may have a complete rest on the voyage and avoid reporters, photographers, special interviewers, hosts of curious folks and many others who make up the crowds which the shy scientist dreads.

It was considered likely that Einstein would meet Prof. Albert Abraham Michelson on his visit to the west coast of the United States. Michelson, head of the department of physics at the University of Chicago, has devoted most of his life to the measuring of the speed of light and now is preparing for important tests on a ranch near Santa Ana, Calif., which is near the locality where Einstein will make his headquarters.

A steel vacuum tube one mile long will be used in the experiments and is expected to reduce the possibility of error to a minimum.

It was understood that the invitation for Einstein to visit the United States was extended by the Carnegie Institute in Washington, but even Einstein's intimate friends said they had no definite information on this subject. The presence of Prof. Michelson in California and the fact that he was expected to be nearing the climax of his experiments at about the time Einstein was due to arrive here led some quarters to believe that the University of Chicago might have been influential in persuading Einstein to make the voyage to America.

Einstein is expected to continue work on his famous unified field theory at Mount Wilson, as well as to indulge in new experiments. Despite the strict secrecy surrounding his plans, his neighbors in Caputh, a Berlin suburb, learned that he was delighted with the prospects of the American trip, if he could be shielded from crowds.

Einstein told a friend that he looked forward with great interest to being able to pursue his scientific labors in so perfect an observatory as that of Mount Wilson. It is understood that he will remain in the United States for three months.

He has been in bad health, due chiefly to overwork, and the invitation to visit America has been delayed for three years for that reason.

ANCIENT WAR CRUISER ADRIFF

8 MEN ABOARD MISSOULA, HAS
STEERING GEAR DIS-
ORGANIZED

Eureka, Cal., Nov. 12.—(UP)—Radio advices received at the Cable Bluff naval radio station today said that the United States cruiser Missoula, adrift for the second time within a week, had been recaptured after an all night search through the fog.

The cutter Saranac found the derelict cruiser and after turning it over to the tug Roosevelt, returned to port at Eureka, the advices said.

Eureka, Cal., Nov. 12.—With eight men on board and its steering apparatus completely disorganized, the ancient war cruiser Missoula was adrift off the fog-bound coast of northern California today, for the second time in the past week.

The vessel broke away from the coast guard cutter Saranac yesterday when a cable used as a tow line snapped. The Saranac had assumed responsibility for the old hulk when the same accident occurred Saturday as the Roosevelt was pulling the Missoula from Bremerton to Oakland.

Before the Saranac could turn back to cast another line on board, the Missoula was lost in the thick fog that has caused so much distress during the past few days.

As the entire engine plant had been removed, those on board the Missoula were forced to steer by means of a hand gear, utterly inadequate in the rough seas at present prevailing.

While the Saranac cruised around in the hope of sighting the battered old vessel, other ships in the vicinity were notified to keep a sharp watch for the craft.

Embroidery Is to Play Part in Winter Fashions

Plans are abroad for a very glittering winter for the feminine fashions. This announcement comes via the newly arrived models from the French capital, for they are scintillating objects for admiration. Sequins, strass, crystal, bugles and beads are all used to effectively pattern afternoon frocks of formal attitude and to characterize the late evening mode.

The prevailing idea seems to be to elaborate models with embroidery though to handle the matter of ornamentation discreetly. That is, embroidery appears in sections as, for instance, on a bolero or a decorative section over the hips suggesting a yoke accentuating the contours of the body and the prevailing molded silhouette. The daytime dress centers interest in the sleeves. Beaded embroidered batiste or net insets, full and loose, are often imposed at the lower part of the sleeve. Also beaded collars in both white and pastel shades provide the touch of daintiness so flattering in lingerie neckwear.

Black Still Dominates Informal Frock Mode

There is no question that for the semi-formal frock black is completely dominating. One may go so far as to say that it has very little competition, except in the new metals. Black velvets in long-skirted, graceful afternoon and dinner frocks—their name is legion; while chiffons, laces and nets add generously to this group in black.

Long-Sleeved Sweaters of Finest Fluffy Wool

Long-sleeved V-neck sweaters with pockets, or short-sleeved young-looking slip-ons, as well as cardigans which may go alone or be worn with matching tuck-ins, are the finest, fluffiest wool, particularly alluring in the soft, powdery pastels. These are to be worn with skirts of silk or of wool as preferred.

Ocean Mountain Ranges

Three ranges of mountains rise from the bottom of the Atlantic between South Africa and South America. Some of these mountains are 13,000 feet in height, or only 2,000 feet less than Mont Blanc.

'BUY NOW' CAMPAIGN GAINING MOMENTUM

MOTION PICTURE THEATRE MEN
PLEDGE SUPPORT TO THE CAMPAIGN

Philadelphia, Nov. 12.—(UP)—Steps have been taken to enlist the aid of President Hoover in the "buy now" campaign designed for the relief of unemployment, the delegates to the eleventh annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America were told at their closing session here today.

The theatre owners pledged their support to the campaign.

A committee of the organization, headed by David Barrist, local exhibitor, has been in communication with George Akerson, the president's secretary, who promised to bring the campaign before Mr. Hoover at the first opportunity. Barrist told the delegates.

M. A. Lightman, of Memphis, Tenn., was re-elected president of the organization today.

The following regional vice presidents were named:

Charles W. Picquet, North Carolina; R. R. Biche, Kansas; Harry Arthur, Samuel Dembrow and Frank C. Walker, all of New York.

J. Emanuel, of Pennsylvania, was re-elected treasurer, and M. J. O'Toole, of Scranton, was re-elected secretary.

Fred Wehrenberg, of Missouri, was named chairman of the board of directors.

Mayor Thompson's Scheme

Receives Many Rebuffs

Chicago, Nov. 12.—(UP)—Mayor William Hale Thompson received only rebuffs today for his scheme of doubling Chicago business by means of $1,000,000 in prizes for purchases.

Craig B. Hazelwood, vice president of the First National bank and chairman of the Metropolitan Trade committee of the Association of Commerce, condemned the mayor's plan, conceived as he was recuperating in the Passavant hospital after an appendicitis operation.

"This is no time to stir up thoughtless buying," said Hazelwood. "Prize plans or any other flag waving method of buyer stimulation can, on their very nature, be only temporary in their effect."

When Thompson announced his plan yesterday he said he would see to it that the prize money of $1,000,000 was raised.

"There are 120,000,000 people in this country who have to do Christmas shopping some place and we can get them to do it here," the mayor asserted.

The Coast Guard

THE activities of the Coast Guard were well described at the meeting of the Rotarians when Donald McKay, a junior grade lieutenant of the service, was a speaker at the service club. The officer is the son of Mr. and Mrs. C. D. McKay of this city and has fine service in the corps as his record.

Lieutenant McKay's talk was very instructive and gave in detail the wide mission of the Coast Guard, which is a seagoing organization operating under the Treasury Department. The Coast Guard was mentioned prominently recently in the reports of four vessels in distress, two on the Atlantic and two on the Pacific which were given aid by the Coast Guard.

When the then Secretary of the Navy Wilbur visited Brainerd some years ago, he paid a tribute to the boys of the Middle West who enlisted in the Navy and formed a fine personnel, many of the recruits seeing the ocean for the first time. In like manner the Coast Guard gains many recruits from the Middle West, who like young McKay get their first taste of the sea in service. It is an odd twist in facts, therefore, to often find native landlubbers rescuing old salts.

The Coast Guard, said Lieutenant McKay, is a seagoing organization operating under the Treasury Department. The Revenue Cutter Service as the Coast Guard was first known was organized on August 4, 1790, by an act of Congress. In 1915 the Revenue Cutter Service and the Life Saving Service were combined and the present organization was created and is known as the United States Coast Guard. The present Coast Guard is composed of over 400 commissioned officers, 750 warrant officers, and 11,000 enlisted men.

On July 1, 1930, the Coast Guard was operating 21 first class cruising cutters, 15 second class cruising cutters, 18 destroyers, 36 harbor cutters and launches, 191 patrol boats, 105 picket boats and 276 Coast Guard Life Saving Stations.

The most important duty is rendering assistance to vessels in distress and saving life and property at sea. During the past year the Coast Guard saved some 6,000 lives and assisted vessels in distress whose total value amounted to over $45,000,000. Humanitarian is the term that has been given to this phase of Coast Guard activity. No night too stormy, no sea too high, no shoals too forbidding to restrain the cutters from their work of saving life. The same heroic spirit of self sacrifice and disregard of personal danger that was fostered by predecessors in the service's infancy pervades the service today not only on large seaworthy cutters and powerful destroyers but on the tiny eggshell craft that patrol nearly every mile of the coast.

The destruction and removal of wrecks, derelicts and other floating dangers to navigation is a duty of the Coast Guard. The removal of large wrecks along the coast is a duty of the Army Engineers but they usually request the Coast Guard to do this task.

In time of war the Coast Guard is amalgamated with and operates as a part of the Navy. Another duty of the Coast Guard is the rendering of medical aid to American vessels engaged in deep sea fisheries. Injured men are removed and first aid given. In cases of serious injuries medical advice is broadcast by radio to the vessel with the injured man. Many lives are saved each year in this manner.

Everyone no doubt has heard or read the many stories about the Coast Guard and the rum smugglers. The Coast Guard is not charged with the enforcement of the 18th amendment but among its numerous duties is the enforcement of the customs laws. The smuggling of rum is a violation of the customs laws. Therefore the Coast Guard has the thankless task of ridding our shores of the lawbreaking rum runner.

If any of you have come into New York harbor or any other large seaport of the United States, you may remember having seen a small boat running around flying a white flag with a blue anchor on it. This is a Coast Guard boat engaged in anchorage duty. It is the Coast Guard duty to see that vessels do not anchor in the main ship channels of our harbors.

The enforcement of laws relating to quarantine and neutrality and the suppression of mutinies at sea are other duties of this service.

Still another duty is the enforcement of navigation and other laws governing merchant vessels and motor boats. In connection with this work the Coast Guard each year boards thousands of vessels and examines the equipment to see that all gear such as life preservers, fire extinguishers, whistles, etc., are according to the law requirements.

During the recent yacht race, Coast Guard vessels patrolled the course to keep the pleasure craft, large and small, clear of the contestants. The patrolling of marine parades and regattas is another duty of the Coast Guard. During the races off Newport this year the newspapermen, movie men and the radio announcers were given accommodations on Coast Guard cutters and destroyers and were carried to ringside seats so that the public could receive accurate information about and description of the races. There were seven cutters, eight destroyers and 24 patrol boats in action during the race. Hundreds of races such as outboard motor boat regattas and small sail boat races are patrolled by the Coast Guard each year.

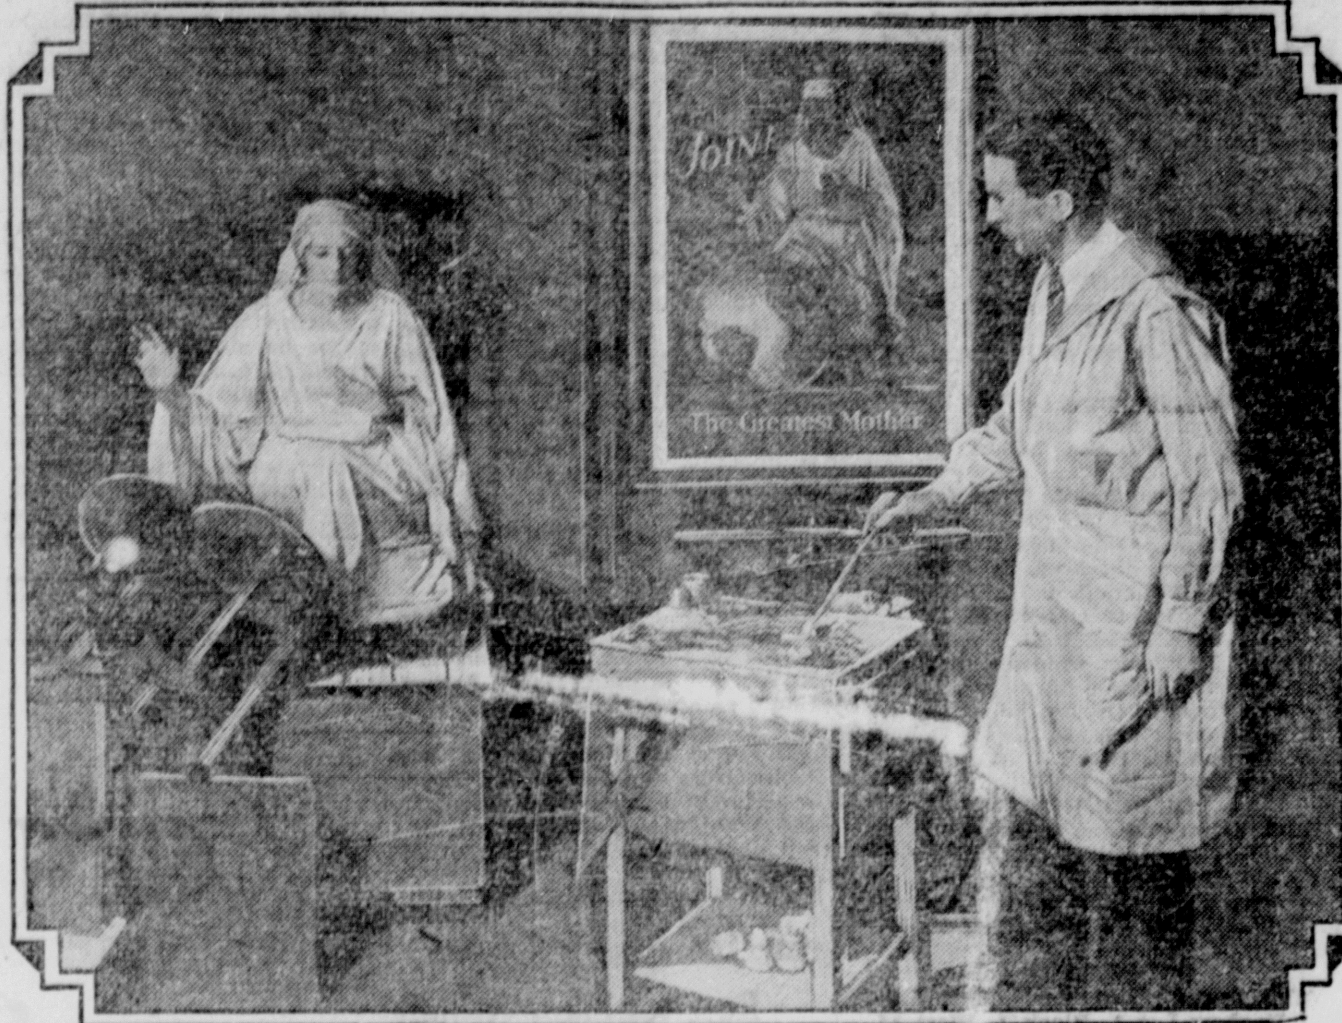

Pribilof Island seals in Alaska are protected by the Coast Guard. The herd of seals has increased from 200,000 in 1867 to almost 1,000,000 at the present time. This increase has been due largely to careful protection and government controlled killing. Protection of game and fisheries in Alaska is another duty.

The Bear and later the Northland make regular trips to Alaskan waters and visit isolated Eskimo villages along the coast as far north as Point Barrow above the Arctic Circle. A doctor and a dentist are carried. These give the necessary dental and medical treatment needed for the welfare of the natives. The officers of the cutter perform marriages, try law offenders, and impose punishments, settle land disputes and do many other similar duties. Teachers and missionaries are transported along the coast from point to point. In the fall the cutter heads south picking up mail and performing tasks similar to those of the trip north.

Last but not least of the duties of the Coast Guard is the International Ice Patrol. Every one here remembers the fate of the White Star liner Titanic when on her maiden voyage from England she was in collision with an iceberg and 1,500 lives were lost.

As a result of this early in 1914 a conference was held in London which was attended by the 14 leading maritime nations.

Artist and Model for 1930 Red Cross Poster

Mr. Lawrence Wilbur, shown in his New York studio, painting the poster which is used in the 1930 Roll Call of the American Red Cross, to urge everyone to join as a member this year.

A SYMBOLICAL figure is selected each year to represent the American Red Cross and its service to the nation, for wide distribution in poster form during the organization's annual appeal for members, at the period of its Roll Call, Armistice Day to Thanksgiving Day.

A poster competition is held, in which prominent artists of the United States participate, and a committee selects the painting which shall carry the Red Cross message for that year.

Lawrence Wilbur, a distinguished artist, with studio in New York, is the creator this year of the magnificent figure representing the spirit of motherhood and of the Red Cross.

hovering over the world. The phrase "The Greatest Mother" was first applied to the Red Cross during the World War, by the soldiers on the battlefield and in hospital.

All of the great poster artists of America have at one period or another since 1917 presented their conception of the spirit of the Red Cross. An early poster by Howard Chandler Christy, entitled "The Spirit of America," and one by Harrison Fisher, depicting a Red Cross nurse, are on exhibition in the original in the Red Cross museum in Washington, together with other originals.

The first creation of "The Greatest Mother" was by A. E. Foster and was considered the most appealing poster ever used by the Red Cross. It showed a spiritual mother-figure holding in her arms a wounded soldier, on a stretcher.

Many artists have used the figure of a Red Cross nurse, until these two ideas—the spiritual "greatest mother" and the symbolical angel of mercy, the Red Cross nurse—have visualized to the American public, all of the service that the Red Cross is organized to extend.

Three hundred thousand of Mr. Wilbur's posters will be distributed in November to remind the public of the annual roll call for members of the Red Cross.

Boosts Golfer Toward Coveted "Hole in One"

In the history of the world it is not likely that any game or pastime has been given quite so much serious attention as the game of golf. Half of the men and women who have played golf seem to have invented some sort of a gadget to improve the possibility of making a perfect score and if all the inventions of this character were placed end to end they would probably reach to some place or other and back again several times. An enthusiastic Englishman points with pride to a device which he has invented to enable the player to determine whether he and his club are in exactly the proper position before attempting to bang the ball. He has a small stand containing an electric light operated by a dry battery and this is placed with great care upon the ground. In the head of his club he has a mirror inserted and when he takes up his position in front of the ball and holds his club in exactly correct angle, the light from the lamp will be reflected through the mirror to the eye of the player. Then, if the wind is just right and no one sneezes just as the play is about to be made, the player may make a hole in one, or he certainly will have the excuse that he tried.

Butter and Cheese Not the Only Milk Products

Though you might not think it, the back collar button you are wearing, and quite likely your shirt buttons, were provided by a cow which is still placidly chewing the cud in some green field. Things are not what they seem, for "bone" studs, "bone" buttons, "ivory" combs and brushes and all kinds of small hard white fittings have often nothing to do with either bone or ivory.

They begin their existence as nothing more solid than milk. At certain times of the year more milk is produced on the farms than can be sold for drinking purposes or made into butter and cheese. But there are factories ready to take any surplus.

Milk contains a substance known as casein, which can be separated from it by chemical processes. By pressing all moisture out of casein and treating it in various ingenious ways, a hard white solid is produced which can be molded readily into any desired shape and has excellent wearing properties.

The liquid obtained when casein is made can be turned into glue, paste and size.

Slavery

The first slaves were prisoners of war. When an army was defeated, such of the defeated men as surrendered belonged to the conqueror by right of conquest, and so also did the women and children, and the entire wealth of the subdued region. From this custom arose the maxim, "To the victor belongs the spoils." So slavery dates from the first battle after which man awoke to the fact that he gained nothing by putting those he had conquered to the sword, but might gain by making use of their services as slaves. So far as we know slavery began in the East, not in Africa. The first colored persons brought to America, or rather to the West Indies, were brought in October, 1562, by John Hawkins. These were either bought or forcibly seized and transported. There were 300 in the first shipment and at that time three ships were employed in the trade.—Literary Digest.

Treachery's Reward

One of the early legends of Rome describes the treachery of Tarpeia, daughter of one of the Roman leaders, says an article in a Boston paper. Tempted by the glitter of the bracelets which the Sabines wore on their left arms, she offered to betray the citadel if they would make her gifts of these. Willing to profit by her perfidy but hating her because of her treachery, the Sabines kept literally to their promise to give her what they wore on their left arms as she opened the gates. They threw their heavy shields upon her and crushed her to death.

The Coast Guard

THE activities of the Coast Guard were well described at the meeting of the Rotarians when Donald McKay, a junior grade lieutenant of the service, was a speaker at the service club. The officer is the son of Mr. and Mrs. C. D. McKay of this city and has fine service in the corps as his record.

Lieutenant McKay's talk was very instructive and gave in detail the wide mission of the Coast Guard, which is a seagoing organization operating under the Treasury Department. The Coast Guard was mentioned prominently recently in the reports of four vessels in distress, two on the Atlantic and two on the Pacific which were given aid by the Coast Guard.

When the then Secretary of the Navy Wilbur visited Brainerd some years ago, he paid a tribute to the boys of the Middle West who enlisted in the Navy and formed a fine personnel, many of the recruits seeing the ocean for the first time. In like manner the Coast Guard gains many recruits from the Middle West, who like young McKay get their first taste of the sea in service. It is an odd twist in facts, therefore, to often find native landlubbers rescuing old salts.

The Coast Guard, said Lieutenant McKay, is a seagoing organization operating under the Treasury Department. The Revenue Cutter Service as the Coast Guard was first known was organized on August 4, 1790, by an act of Congress. In 1915 the Revenue Cutter Service and the Life Saving Service were combined and the present organization was created and is known as the United States Coast Guard. The present Coast Guard is composed of over 400 commissioned officers, 750 warrant officers, and 11,000 enlisted men.

On July 1, 1930, the Coast Guard was operating 21 first class cruising cutters, 15 second class cruising cutters, 18 destroyers, 36 harbor cutters and launches, 191 patrol boats, 105 picket boats and 276 Coast Guard Life Saving Stations.

The most important duty is rendering assistance to vessels in distress and saving life and property at sea. During the past year the Coast Guard saved some 6,000 lives and assisted vessels in distress whose total value amounted to over $45,000,000. Humanitarian is the term that has been given to this phase of Coast Guard activity. No night too stormy, no sea too high, no shoals too forbidding to restrain the cutters from their work of saving life. The same heroic spirit of self sacrifice and disregard of personal danger that was fostered by predecessors in the service's infancy pervades the service today not only on large seaworthy cutters and powerful destroyers but on the tiny eggshell craft that patrol nearly every mile of the coast.

The destruction and removal of wrecks, derelicts and other floating dangers to navigation is a duty of the Coast Guard. The removal of large wrecks along the coast is a duty of the Army Engineers but they usually request the Coast Guard to do this task.

In time of war the Coast Guard is amalgamated with and operates as a part of the Navy. Another duty of the Coast Guard is the rendering of medical aid to American vessels engaged in deep sea fisheries. Injured men are removed and first aid given. In cases of serious injuries medical advice is broadcast by radio to the vessel with the injured man. Many lives are saved each year in this manner.

Everyone no doubt has heard or read the many stories about the Coast Guard and the rum smugglers. The Coast Guard is not charged with the enforcement of the 18th amendment but among its numerous duties is the enforcement of the customs laws. The smuggling of rum is a violation of the customs laws. Therefore the Coast Guard has the thankless task of ridding our shores of the lawbreaking rum runner.

If any of you have come into New York harbor or any other large seaport of the United States, you may remember having seen a small boat running around flying a white flag with a blue anchor on it. This is a Coast Guard boat engaged in anchorage duty. It is the Coast Guard duty to see that vessels do not anchor in the main ship channels of our harbors.

The enforcement of laws relating to quarantine and neutrality and the suppression of mutinies at sea are other duties of this service.

Still another duty is the enforcement of navigation and other laws governing merchant vessels and motor boats. In connection with this work the Coast Guard each year boards thousands of vessels and examines the equipment to see that all gear such as life preservers, fire extinguishers, whistles, etc., are according to the law requirements.

During the recent yacht race, Coast Guard vessels patrolled the course to keep the pleasure craft, large and small, clear of the contestants. The patrolling of marine parades and regattas is another duty of the Coast Guard. During the races off Newport this year the newspapermen, movie men and the radio announcers were given accommodations on Coast Guard cutters and destroyers and were carried to ringside seats so that the public could receive accurate information about and description of the races. There were seven cutters, eight destroyers and 24 patrol boats in action during the race. Hundreds of races such as outboard motor boat regattas and small sail boat races are patrolled by the Coast Guard each year.

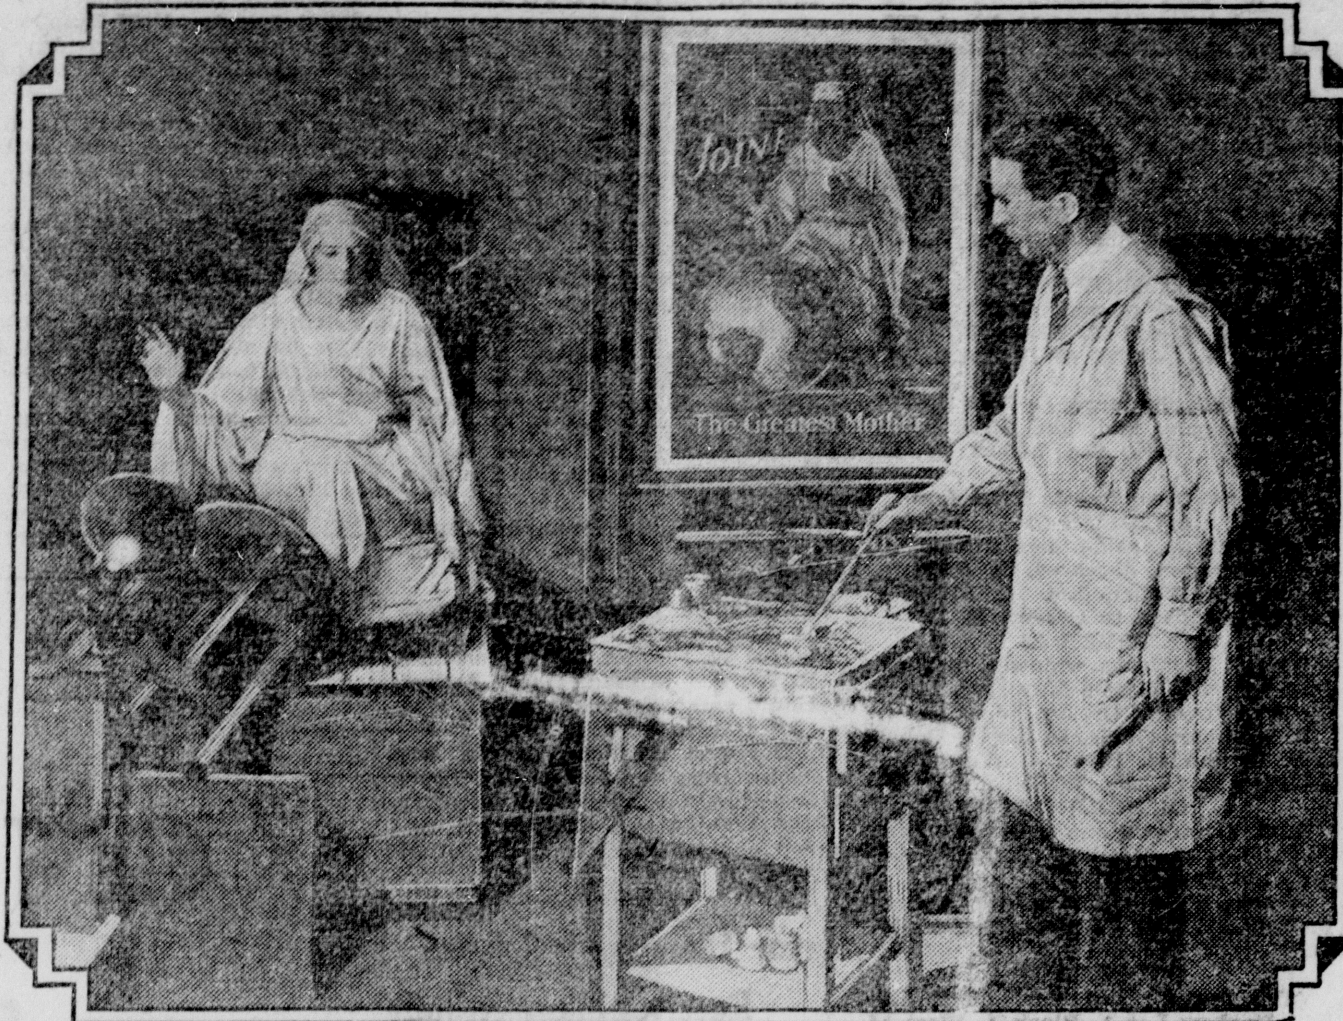

Pribilof Island seals in Alaska are protected by the Coast Guard. The herd of seals has increased from 200,000 in 1867 to almost 1,000,000 at the present time. This increase has been due largely to careful protection and government controlled killing. Protection of game and fisheries in Alaska is another duty.

The Bear and later the Northland make regular trips to Alaskan waters and visit isolated Eskimo villages along the coast as far north as Point Barrow above the Arctic Circle. A doctor and a dentist are carried. These give the necessary dental and medical treatment needed for the welfare of the natives. The officers of the cutter perform marriages, try law offenders, and impose punishments, settle land disputes and do many other similar duties. Teachers and missionaries are transported along the coast from point to point. In the fall the cutter heads south picking up mail and performing tasks similar to those of the trip north.

Last but not least of the duties of the Coast Guard is the International Ice Patrol. Every one here remembers the fate of the White Star liner Titanic when on her maiden voyage from England she was in collision with an iceberg and 1,500 lives were lost.

As a result of this early in 1914 a conference was held in London which was attended by the 14 leading maritime nations.

CROSBY-IRONTON OVERWHELMS BRAINERD ELEVEN 20 TO 0

RANGE TEAM SCORES THREE TOUCHDOWNS, KEEPS SLATE CLEAN

BRAINERD OUTPLAYS C-I IN 2ND QUARTER WHEN FUMBLE PREVENTS TOUCHDOWN

DAMMANN'S MEN FIGHT STUBBORN DEFENSIVE BATTLE BUT LACK PUNCH ON OFFENSIVE

By "HAPPY" COLE

Going the way of Aitkin and Little Falls, Brainerd high school gridmen fell victims before the onslaught of Crosby-Ironton's undefeated district champions, 20-0, yesterday afternoon at Crosby before an Armistice Day crowd of 1,000. The old rivals staged a real battle for honors and the game was closer than the score indicated.

Crosby-Ironton presented a driving, running attack that wore down the Brainerd linemen and several passes worked for the Rangers when a successful pass was needed to keep possession of the ball. The combination of Petrabor, Perpich and Olson was C-I's scoring threat. The team was well grounded on fundamentals, blocked well and tackled hard.

Brainerd, on the other hand, fought hard but lacked the necessary punch to score. All during the second quarter Brainerd kept the play in Crosby territory but a costly fumble on the 3-yard line gave the Rangers the ball. They kicked out of danger and Brainerd's greatest chance to score was snuffed out.

Crosby Scores

Crosby scored its first touchdown early in the first quarter. After the kickoff Brainerd failed to gain and punted to midfield. Brainerd seemed to be holding the Range team when a long pass made it first down for Crosby. The Rangers scored a few minutes later after a series of hard line-bucks and smashing end runs. Petrabor, C-I. quarterback, smashed over the center of the line for the touchdown. Perpich added the extra point on a wide end run around the Brainerd left end.

During the remainder of the first quarter Brainerd seemed to have the advantage. Going into the second quarter Foster began to smash into the C-I line. Several times the Rangers did not succeed in stopping him until he had reeled off eight or nine yards. A lateral pass from Hogan to Wygie added a little more and Schuety swept around the Crosby left end for 8 yards to put the ball on the C-I 20-yard line. Brainerd was penalized 15 yards for holding but an end run by Schuety, another Hogan to Wygie pass, and a line buck by Foster made up the distance. Brainerd, however, lost the ball on downs a few minutes later.

C-I kicked and Hogan carried the ball right back to the C-I 35-yard line. A beautiful pass, Gabiou to Foster, put the ball on the C-I 5-yard line. It was first down and the goal to go when Crosby called for time out. Foster took the ball up to the 3-yard line on another line buck. Then a costly fumble ruined Brainerd's best scoring opportunity and C-I kicked out of danger.

During the remainder of the first half the air was filled with footballs. Neither team completed a pass, Brainerd intercepting two of Crosby's and the C-I men nailing one of Gabiou's offerings.

It was still very much anybody's ball game for although C-I held a 7-point margin, Brainerd had been threatening to score and the Brainerd goal line had never been in danger since that first successful thrust.

The Turning Point

Shortly after the second half opened the break came that spelled defeat for Brainerd and gave C-I an advantage difficult to overcome. Brainerd had received the kickoff and failing to gain on a series of line plays, Gabiou punted to the C-I 30-yard line.

On the first play, Petrabor, husky C-I. quarterback, came pounding through the right side of the Brainerd line. It seemed that the Brainerd linemen had him stopped but a final twist wrenched off the clinging hands of two Brainerd tacklers and Petrabor was free. The Brainerd secondary defense had come in too close on the play and Mr. Petrabor started his dash for the Brainerd goal line 70 yards away. It looked like a Brainerd linesman might catch him for the first few yards but Petrabor, putting forth every ounce of effort pulled away and as he neared the goal line the fleet-footed Crosby back was putting more distance between himself and his pursuers.

Stonemark, substitute left half for C-I, dashed around the Brainerd left end for the extra point. Score: Crosby-Ironton, 14; Brainerd, 0.

Brainerd got a decided break a few moments later. Brainerd had failed to gain after the kickoff and punted to the C-I 45-yard line. The ball had touched a C-I player who did not down it and Heikkinen, now in the game for Foster, downed the ball to put it in Brainerd's possession but C-I recovered another Brainerd fumble a few minutes later.

McPherson, playing center for the locals, had to be taken from the game suffering from an injured leg. He had been playing a wonderful defensive game and begged to remain in the contest although he was in no condition to go on. Franks went in at center for Brainerd and was injured on almost the first play. Despite a game leg Franks continued to play and succeeded in breaking through the sturdy C-I line on several occasions to down the ball-carrier behind the line of scrimmage.

Heikkinen's Run

A fumble halted C-I's march on the Brainerd 25-yard line. Heikkinen dropped back and on a fake punt reeled off 30 yards, carrying the ball to the C-I 45-yard line before he was finally hauled down. The play caught the C-I men flat-footed and the little Brainerd speed-demon almost got away. It was the prettiest individual play of the day except for Petrabor's 70-yard dash for the second C-I touchdown.

The third quarter ended a few minutes later after Brainerd had failed to make any ground in C-I territory. The Wygie brothers, Franks and Moe were breaking through the C-I line quite frequently to down the ball-carrier but off-side penalties on Brainerd made up the distance for C-I.

Crosby took up a steady march down the field now against the tiring Brainerd forward wall. The Rangers did not risk an aerial attack but were content to gain ground consistently on line bucks, cut-backs and end runs. Once Olson added about 15 yards on as pretty a bit of open field running as has been seen this year on a high school gridiron in this vicinity. Perpich, C-I. fullback, carried the ball over the goal line from the 5-yard line on a line buck. C-I took too long in the huddle when deciding how to attempt the point after the touchdown and the referee ruled the attempt out. Score: Crosby-Ironton, 20; Brainerd, 0.

Youngsters Get Chance

The remainder of the time was spent by both teams in futile attempts to get the ball into scoring territory. Dammann sent in a number of sophomores to give them a little experience and the Crosby line-up was also altered to give the new men a chance. The ball was in C-I's possession in midfield when the final gun sounded.

The C-I band lived up to things at the half with several tunes and the large crowd cheered frequently during the game.

Moe, Brainerd tackle, was the outstanding Brainerd player. He was a demon in the line, smearing countless C-I plays before they got started. The Wygie brothers, Captain Garvey, Franks, Kech, Haas and McPherson also played some very nice football in the line. Gabiou, with his passing, Foster, Heikkinen and Schuety showed up well in the backfield for B. H. S.

Football Notes

Ann Arbor, Mich., Nov. 12.—(UP)—Michigan's grid squad was scheduled for a long defensive drill today in the final strenuous workout for Saturday's game with Minnesota. The Wolverines worked on offensive yesterday, scoring three touchdowns against the varsity.

Minneapolis, Nov. 12.—(UP)—MacDougal, sensational sophomore half-back, and Captain Win Brockmeyer, veteran quarterback, will carry the brunt of Minnesota's attack in Saturday's battle against Michigan, with Manders reserved for line crashing duty.

Evanston, Ill., Nov. 12.—(UP)—Although Pug Reuther, star fullback, will not be available for Saturday's game with Wisconsin, Coach Hanley has five varsity backs ready for duty and is uncertain what starting combination he will use. In yesterday's drill he used Bruder and Hanley at halves.

South Bend, Ind., Nov. 12.—(UP)—With examinations occupying the attention of varsity gridgers only light practices are being held at Notre Dame for Saturday's game with Drake. The Iowa team always has been a tough opponent for Notre Dame and Coach Rockne has indicated that he will use his regulars during much of the contest.

Rochester Junior College Defeats Winona State Teachers College 20-13

Winona, Minn., Nov. 12.—(UP)—Rochester Junior college defeated Winona State Teachers college 20 to 13 here Armistice day. A stronger and heavier line won the game for Rochester, Winona being able to score only for forward passes.

A blocked punt on the Winona end yard line led to Rochester's first touchdown. The victory gives Rochester the southern Minnesota conference title.

Post-Season Charity Games Offers Rejected

Tuscaloosa, Ala., Nov. 12.—(UP)—Two offers to participate in post-season charity games have been rejected by the University of Alabama athletic committee on behalf of the conference-leading Crimson team.

It was explained by Dr. J. J. Doster, faculty chairman of the committee, that Alabama's hard schedule of games made it advisable for the team to get down to scholastic work.

HAS BEARING ON BIG TEN TITLE CHAMPIONSHIP

BY DEFEATING WISCONSIN, THE WILDCATS WILL TIE MICHIGAN FOR TITLE

MICHIGAN MUST DEFEAT GOPHERS AND THEN SUBDUCE CHICAGO NEXT WEEK

By GEORGE KIRKSEY

(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Chicago, Nov. 12.—The next to the last week of the Big Ten football season offers three conference games, two intersectional contests and a traditional battle for Saturday.

Conference:
Favorite Underdog
Northwestern vs. Wisconsin at Evanston.
Michigan vs. Minnesota at Ann Arbor.

Intersectional:
Iowa vs. Penn State at Iowa City.
Ohio State vs. Pittsburgh at Columbus.

Non-conference:
Purdue vs. Butler at LaFayette.
Three other games of importance outside the conference will be staged in this section, as follows:

Favorite Underdog
Notre Dame vs. Drake at South Bend.
Marquette vs. Detroit at Milwaukee.
Boston College vs. Loyola at Chicago.

The final solution of the Big Ten football championship is dependent on the outcome of the Northwestern-Wisconsin and Michigan-Minnesota games. By defeating Wisconsin, Northwestern will at least tie Michigan for the title. Michigan, however, must defeat Chicago next week to complete its season without defeat, even if the Wolverines down Minnesota.

Despite the fact that Coach Staggs has abandoned his customary caution and pronounced the Illinois-Chicago game a toss-up, Illinois is a slight favorite in this age-old rivalry.

The Big Ten's representatives in the two intersectional games should add two more victories to the conference's record. Ohio State's offense which began to click against Navy last week is expected to prove too much for Pittsburgh, Iowa has lost four out of six games, but Coach Burt Ingwersen has brought a young team along to a point where it has considerable strength. Penn State, which has either tied or lost its last four games, will go into the game an underdog.

The Notre Dame-Drake game at South Bend may prove closer than expected as Coach Rockne plans to use his second and third teams. It will be remembered that Drake threw a scare into Notre Dame last season by leading the Irish for three periods, only to lose, 3-7.

172 RECORDS TO BE EXAMINED BY ATHLETIC UNION

New York, Nov. 12.—(UP)—Applications for recognition of 172 record-breaking performances by American athletes will be laid before the Amateur Athletic union of the United States when it assembles in Washington, D. C., on Nov. 16, 17 and 18.

The records, established during the past 12 months, have been filed with Louis N. Goldsmith, chairman of the union's record committee.

Heading the list of outstanding performers is Helene Madison, 17-year-old swimming sensation from Seattle. During the last eight months Miss Madison bettered 12 world's and 27 American marks.

"Laying It on the Line"

By HARDIN BURNLEY

THE FIERCE-CHARGING LINEMEN ARE THE BACKBONE OF A GRID TEAM!

"SWEDE" OBERLANDER FAMOUS DARTMOUTH STAR WHO PLAYED BOTH ON THE LINE AND IN THE BACKFIELD SAYS THAT LINE PLAY IS FAR HARDER AND MORE PUNISHING!

THOSE who really study football intelligently can endorse cheerfully this crude paraphrase of a celebrated cockney ballad:

"It's the time in all the papers It's the line that gets the blame It's the backs as gets the glory

Ain't it a bloody shame?" Which brief observation on football critiques prompts consideration of the problem: What are the harder positions to play—line or backfield?

Of course, it would take pages, or indeed a tome, to analyze all phases of line and back playing details so, for the present, we'll confine this ever interesting discussion to the bare testimony of two great grid stars who know through personal experience what both line and backfield activities really are.

One of these is Jim ("Swede") Oberlander, Dartmouth immortal, now coaching gallant little Wesleyan in the Connecticut River Valley; the other is Wesley Fesler, Ohio State's big hero this season and last. Both experienced much action in and in back of the line, and each thinks all the backs have the less arduous duties during the course of a game, or a period for that matter.

Up at Hanover, Oberlander broke in as a tackle. When squad necessities moved him into the backfield where he soon attained lasting fame, the "Swede" (by nickname only) soon realized what he later expressed: "What a cinch this is compared to the mashing in the line!"

The backs get many bumps, but think of the shoulder-to-shoulder shock on every play when one is in the line. The boys down front must try to stop every thrust close up when on defense and bruise open holes for their own backs when on offense.

Fesler was (and still is) a great end, but he's also adept at carrying the ball, so when additional backfield talent was needed they switched the versatile "Wes" to the wingback role. He admits, too, that while no detail in football is soft, the backs have it "cushy" compared to those in the rush-line.

Oberlander and Fesler ought to know!

"It's in the Blood"

By HARDIN BURNLEY

GREATS of the gridiron seldom transmit to their sons anything near the measure of what dad once was but their boys do inherit considerable of the urge and spirit which helped make their sires so formidable at football. For example, Paul Staggs, youngest son of the veteran Chicago coach, is first string quarterback on that team. He's a good player on a mediocre team. But it's unlikely that Paul will ever attain the grid or other athletic skill of his father, who long ago was listed among Yale's immortals in both baseball and football.

Then there are the Heston boys, sons of Michigan's truly immortal Willie who was "the greatest fullback of all time," according to many expert estimates. Willie, Jr., is in his second year as a varsity back and a fairly good one, swift and all that but not the devastatingly powerful carrier that "the ol' man" was when he did so much to illuminate those "point-a-minute" Wolverines almost thirty years ago. Jack Heston is now a freshman and the tip-off on him is that he's more of "a chip off the old block."

At Wisconsin, Mark Catlin, Jr., is doing well at an end. More than a quarter of a century ago, his dad was captain of the Chicago team which beat a Hestonized Michigan machine, 2-0, in a bersefire affair.

Coach "Dick" Hanley at Northwestern has a splendid outfit, not the least of which is his kid brother at quarterback and don't think for a second that kinship had anything to do with his getting the hard-won position.

Truxton Hare, Jr., son of one of Walter Camp's "all times guards" when he played for Penn in the neolithic nineties, is holding down a like position for Yale. He blocked that Army punt which led quickly to Eli's touchdown and which might have won the game until the Cadets "got" Albie Booth to whom a weirdly misdirected pass was tossed.

Perry Trafford, Harvard tackle, is carrying on his family tradition; his father having been a guard and his uncle, back, for the Crimson about forty years ago. These are but a few instances showing that football's often "in the blood."

CROSBY-IRONTON OVERWHELMS BRAINERD ELEVEN 20 TO 0

RANGE TEAM SCORES THREE TOUCHDOWNS, KEEPS SLATE CLEAN

BRAINERD OUTPLAYS C-I IN 2ND QUARTER WHEN FUMBLE PREVENTS TOUCHDOWN

DAMMANN'S MEN FIGHT STUB-BORN DEFENSIVE BATTLE BUT LACK PUNCH ON OFFENSIVE

By "HAPPY" COLE

Going the way of Aitkin and Little Falls, Brainerd high school gridmen fell victims before the onslaught of Crosby-Ironton's uncreated district champions, 20-0, yesterday afternoon at Crosby before an Armistice Day crowd of 1,000. The old rivals staged a real battle for honors and the game was closer than the score indicated.

Crosby-Ironton presented a driving, running attack that wore down the Brainerd linesmen and several passes worked for the Rangers when a successful pass was needed to keep possession of the ball. The combination of Petrabor, Perpich and Olson was C-I's scoring threat. The team was well grounded on fundamentals, blocked well and tackled hard.

Brainerd, on the other hand, fought hard but lacked the necessary punch to score. All during the second quarter Brainerd kept the play in Crosby territory but a costly fumble on the 3-yard line gave the Rangers the ball. They kicked out of danger and Brainerd's greatest chance to score was snuffed out.

Crosby Scores

Crosby scored its first touchdown early in the first quarter. After the kickoff Brainerd failed to gain and punted to midfield. Brainerd seemed to be holding the Range team when a long pass made it first down for Crosby. The Rangers scored a few minutes later after a series of hard line-bucks and smashing end runs. Petrabor, C-I quarterback, smashed over the center of the line for the touchdown. Perpich added the extra point on a wide end run around the Brainerd left end.

During the remainder of the first quarter Brainerd seemed to have the advantage. Going into the second quarter Foster began to smash into the C-I line. Several times the Rangers did not succeed in stopping him until he had reeled off eight or nine yards. A lateral pass from Hogan to Wygle added a little more and Schuetz swept around the Crosby left end for 8 yards to put the ball on the C-I 20-yard line. Brainerd was penalized 15 yards for holding but an end run by Schuetz, another Hogan to Wygle pass, and a line buck by Foster made up the distance. Brainerd, however, lost the ball on downs a few minutes later.

C-I kicked and Hogan carried the ball right back to the C-I 35-yard line. A beautiful pass, Gabiou to Foster, put the ball on the C-I 9-yard line. It was first down and the goal to go when Crosby called for time out. Foster took the ball up to the 3-yard line on another line buck. Then a costly fumble ruined Brainerd's best scoring opportunity and C-I kicked out of danger.

During the remainder of the first half the air was filled with footbells. Neither team completed a pass, Brainerd intercepting two of Crosby's and the C-I men nailing one of Gabiou's offerings.

It was still very much anybody's ball game for although C-I held a 7-point margin, Brainerd had been threatening to score and the Brainerd goal line had never been in danger since that first successful thrust.

The Turning Point

Shortly after the second half opened the break came that spelled defeat for Brainerd and gave C-I an advantage difficult to overcome. Brainerd had received the kickoff and failing to gain on a series of line plays, Gabiou punted to the C-I 30-yard line.

On the first play, Petrabor, husky C-I quarterback, came pounding through the right side of the Brainerd line. It seemed that the Brainerd linesmen had him stopped but a final twist wrenched off the clinging hands of two Brainerd tacklers and Petrabor was free. The Brainerd secondary defense had come in too close on the play and Mr. Petrabor started his dash for the Brainerd goal line 70 yards away. It looked like a Brainerd linesman might catch him for the first few yards but Petrabor, putting forth every ounce of effort pulled away and as he neared the goal line the fleet-footed Crosby back was putting more distance between himself and his pursuers.

Brainerd got a decided break a few moments later. Brainerd had failed to gain after the kickoff and punted to the C-I 45-yard line. The ball had touched a C-I player who did not down it and Heikkinen, now in the game for Foster, downed the ball to put it in Brainerd's possession but C-I recovered another Brainerd fumble a few minutes later.

McPherson, playing center for the locals, had to be taken from the game suffering from an injured leg. He had been playing a wonderful defensive game and begged to remain in the contest although he was in no condition to go on. Franks went in at center for Brainerd and was injured on almost the first play. Despite a game leg Franks continued to play and succeeded in breaking through the sturdy C-I line on several occasions to down the ball-carrier behind the line of scrimmage.

Heikkinen's Run

A fumble halted C-I's march on the Brainerd 25-yard line. Heikkinen dropped back and on a fake punt reeled off 30 yards, carrying the ball to the C-I 45-yard line before he was finally hauled down. The play caught the C-I men flat-footed and the little Brainerd speed-demon almost got away. It was the prettiest individual play of the day except for Petrabor's 70-yard dash for the second C-I touchdown.

The third quarter ended a few minutes later after Brainerd had failed to make any ground in C-I territory. The Wygle brothers, Franks and Moe were breaking through the C-I line quite frequently to down the ball-carrier but off-side penalties on Brainerd made up the distance for C-I.

Crosby took up a steady march down the field now against the tiring Brainerd forward wall. The Rangers did not risk an aerial attack but were content to gain ground consistently on line bucks, cut-backs and end runs. Once Olson added about 15 yards on as pretty a bit of open field running as has been seen this year on a high school gridiron in this vicinity. Perpich, C-I fullback, carried the ball over the goal line from the 5-yard line on a line buck. C-I took too long in the huddle when deciding how to attempt the point after the touchdown and the referee ruled the attempt out. Score: Crosby-Ironton, 20; Brainerd, 0.

Youngsters Get Chance

The remainder of the time was spent by both teams in futile attempts to get the ball into scoring territory. Dammann sent in a number of sophomores to give them a little experience and the Crosby line-up was also altered to give the new men a chance. The ball was in C-I's possession in mid-field when the final gun sounded.

The C-I band lived up to things at the half with several tunes and the large crowd cheered frequently during the game.

Moe, Brainerd tackle, was the outstanding Brainerd player. He was a demon in the line, smearing countless C-I plays before they got started. The Wygle brothers, Captain Garvey, Franks, Koch, Haas and McPherson also played some very nice football in the line. Gabiou, with his passing, Foster, Heikkinen and Schuetz showed up well in the backfield for B. H. S.

Chicago, Nov. 12.—The next to the last week of the Big Ten football season offers three conference games, two intersectional contests and a traditional battle for Saturday.

Conference:

Favorite Underdog

Northwestern vs. Wisconsin at Evanston.

Michigan vs. Minnesota at Ann Arbor.

Illinois vs. Chicago at Chicago.

Intersectional:

Iowa vs. Penn State at Iowa City.

Ohio State vs. Pittsburgh at Columbus.

Non-conference:

Purdue vs. Butler at LaFayette.

Three other games of importance outside the conference will be staged in this section, as follows:

Favorite Underdog

Notre Dame vs. Drake at South Bend.

Marquette vs. Detroit at Milwaukee.

Boston College vs. Loyola at Chicago.

The final solution of the Big Ten football championship is dependent on the outcome of the Northwestern-Wisconsin and Michigan-Minnesota games. By defeating Wisconsin, Northwestern will at least tie Michigan for the title. Michigan, however, must defeat Chicago next week to complete its season without defeat, even if the Wolverines down Minnesota.

Despite the fact that Coach Stagg has abandoned his customary caution and pronounced the Illinois-Chicago game a toss-up, Illinois is a slight favorite in this age-old rivalry.

The Big Ten's representatives in the two intersectional games should add two more victories to the conference's record. Ohio State's offense which began to click against Navy last week is expected to prove too much for Pittsburgh. Iowa has lost four out of six games, but Coach Burt Ingwersen has brought a young team along to a point where it has considerable strength. Penn State, which has either tied or lost its last four games, will go into the game an underdog.

The Notre Dame-Drake game at South Bend may prove closer than expected as Coach Rockne plans to use his second and third teams. It will be remembered that Drake threw a scare into Notre Dame last season by leading the Irish for three periods, only to lose, 13-7.

172 RECORDS TO BE EXAMINED BY ATHLETIC UNION

New York, Nov. 12.—(AP)—Application for recognition of 172 record-breaking performances by American athletes will be laid before the Amateur Athletic union of the United States when it assembles in Washington, D. C., on Nov. 16, 17 and 18.

The records, established during the past 12 months, have been filed with Louis N. Goldsmith, chairman of the union's record committee.

Heading the list of outstanding performers is Helene Madison, 17-year-old swimming sensation from Seattle. During the last eight months Miss Madison bettered 12 world's and 27 American marks.

"Laying It on the Line"

By HARDIN BURNLEY

THE FIERCE-CHARGING LINEMEN ARE THE BACKBONE OF A GRID TEAM!

"SWED" OBERLANDER FAMOUS DARTMOUTH STAR WHO PLAYED BOTH ON THE LINE AND IN THE BACKFIELD SAYS THAT LINE PLAY IS FAR HARDER AND MORE PUNISHING!

-AND "SWED" OUGHTA KNOW!

SPORT BUG - 11-12

THOSE who really study football intelligently can endorse cheerfully this crude paraphrase of a celebrated cockney ballad:

"It's the time in all the papers It's the line that gets the blame It's the backs as gets the glory

Ain't it a bloody shame?" Which brief observation on football critiques prompts consideration of the problem: What are the harder positions to play—line or backfield?

Of course, it would take pages, or indeed a tome, to analyze all phases of line and back playing details so, for the present, we'll confine this ever interesting discussion to the bare testimony of two great grid stars who know through personal experience what both line and backfield activities really are.

One of these is Jim ("Swede") Oberlander, Dartmouth immortal, now coaching gallant little Wesleyan in the Connecticut River Valley; the other is Wesley Fesler, Ohio State's big hero this season and last. Both experienced much action in and in back of the line, and each thinks all the backs have the less arduous duties during the course of a game, or a period for that matter.

Up at Hanover, Oberlander broke in as a tackle. When squad necessities moved him into the backfield where he soon attained lasting fame, the "Swede" (by nickname only) soon realized what he later expressed: "What a cinch this is compared to the messing in the line!" The backs get many bumps, but think of the shoulder-to-shoulder shock on every play when one is in the line. The boys down front must try to stop every thrust close up when on defense and bruise open holes for their own backs when on offense.

Fesler was (and still is) a great end, but he's also adept at carrying the ball, so when additional backfield talent was needed they switched the versatile "Wes" to the wingback role. He admits, too, that while no detail in football is soft, the backs have it "cushy" compared to those in the rush-line. And...

Oberlander and Fesler ought to know! Copyright, 1930, by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

PAT PAGE—INDIANA'S COACH—HIS SON IS FOLLOWING HIS FOOTSTEPS AS A FRESHMAN UNDER STAGG!

FAMOUS FOOTBALL FAMILIES OF TODAY ARE THE HESTONS, HARDINGS, STAGGS, LEAS, YOSTS, ETC.

HOWARD SPRAGUE—SOUTHERN METHODIST STAR, IS A BROTHER OF BUD SPRAGUE FORMER ARMY GRID CAPTAIN

11-13 SPORT BUG.

GREATS of the gridiron seldom transmit to their sons anything near the measure of what dad once was but their boys and spirit which helped make their sires so formidable at football. For example, Paul Stagg, youngest son of the veteran Chicago coach, is first string quarterback on that team. He's a good player on a mediocre team. But it's unlikely that Paul will ever attain the grid or other athletic skill of his father who long ago was listed among Yale's immortals in both baseball and football.

Then there are the Heston boys, sons of Michigan's truly immortal Willie who was "the greatest full-back of all time," according to many expert estimates. Willie, Jr., is in his second year as a varsity back and a fairly good one, swift and all that but not the devastatingly powerful carrier that "the ol' man" was when he did so much to illuminate those "point-a-minute" Wolverines almost thirty years ago. Jack Heston is now a freshman and the tip-off on him is that he's more of "a chip off the old block."

At Wisconsin, Mark Catlin, Jr., is doing well at an end. More than a quarter of a century ago, his dad was captain of the Chicago team which beat a Hestonized Michigan machine, 2-0, in a berserk affair.

Coach "Dick" Hanley at Northwestern has a splendid outfit, not the least of which is his kid brother at quarterback and don't think for a second that kinship had anything to do with his getting the hard-won position.

Truxton Hare, Jr., son of one of Walter Camp's "all times guards" when he played for Penn in the neolithic nineties, is holding down a like position for Yale. He blocked that Army punt which led quickly to Eli's touchdown and which might have won the game until the Cadets "got" Albie Booth to whom a weirdly misdirected pass was tossed.

Ferry Trafford, Harvard tackle, is carrying on his family tradition; his father having been a guard and his uncle, back, for the Crimson about forty years ago. These are but a few instances showing that football's often "in the blood." Copyright, 1930, by King Features Syndicate, Inc.

PRINCETON IS TO TANGLE WITH YALE

BULLDOG HOLDS TREMENDOUS EDGE OVER TRADITIONAL RIVALS

By HENRY McLEMORE
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
New York, Nov. 12.—Whether the "I'd break a leg for dear old Siwash" spirit passed out of football along with bearded linemen and the flying wedge will be determined Saturday when Princeton tangles with Yale in Palmer stadium.

If Princeton beats Yale, or even holds the Blue to a decent score, you may rest assured that the Tigers, to a man, still believe in giving their all. For Princeton, judging from past performances this season, has an outfit that resembles a football team only in that eleven men play at a time and all have numbers on their backs.

A glimpse at the records of the two teams show just what a tremendous edge Yale holds over its traditional rivals. The Blue, despite a strenuous schedule, is undefeated save by Georgia, while Princeton has been licked by Cornell, Brown, Navy and Lehigh, none of which has a particularly strong team.

This state of affairs, however, is not a new thing for Princeton eleven. Time and again the Tigers have been beaten in the newspapers on Wednesday only to win the game on Saturday. This Saturday Bill Roper sings his swan song as a Princeton coach.

TRIBUTE TO TRUE SPIRIT OF ARMISTICE

GERMAN ARMY TEAM CAPTURES INTERNATIONAL MILITARY TROPHY

By FRANK GETTY
(United Press Sports Editor)
New York, Nov. 12.—No more impressive tribute to the true spirit of Armistice Day could have been paid anywhere than that which took place in Madison Square Garden last night when a German army team captured the international military trophy in the climatic feature of the National Horse Show.

While some 14,000 spectators stood and applauded, a band played the new German national anthem as the historic trophy was presented to the victors, who scored a clean-cut victory.

The United States team, two of whose members rode well-nigh perfect courses, finished second, with the Hungarian army team third and representatives of the Irish Free State fourth. Canada and Sweden were the other competing nations.

Even before the Germans competed, their officers were called out to salute the colors while their national emblem was played first, ahead of those of the former allied and neutral nations represented in the competition for the international cup.

The jumping, over the difficult "A" course well-known to horse lovers, was not up to the standard of former years, but the team-work of the Germans surpassed that of the five rival nations. In the recent horse show at Boston, the German army team triumphed without a single fault. Last night, they registered 5½ faults, to 10 for the United States, 16 for Hungary and 17½ for the Irish Free State.

DORNIER DO-X CARRIES PRINCE OF WALES ALOFT

Calshot, England, Nov. 12.—(UP)—The huge German seaplane Dornier DO-X, carrying the Prince of Wales and half a dozen other prominent persons, went up at 1 p. m. today for a brief trial flight in the neighborhood of Southampton.

The plane rose easily after a run of about three-fourths of a mile and disappeared in the mists to the southwest.

Besides the prince, those aboard included Wilson Cross, Gordon England, Dr. and Mrs. Claude Dornier, three officers of the royal air force and a crew of 15.

The plane made a perfect landing on the water after a flight of 26 minutes, circling the air base at a height of 500 feet before coming down.

The ship was conducted to its buoy. The visiting party remained aboard for a time.

1200 YOUNGSTERS EXHIBITED AT JUNIOR LIVESTOCK SHOW

South St. Paul, Minn., Nov. 12.—(UP)—Eight 4-H club members awaited the judging late today which was to decide which would capture final grand honors in the 13th annual Junior Livestock Show.

The exhibitors will be the winners of first and second prizes in the class honors.

Some 1,200 youngsters, most of them exhibitors in the Junior Livestock Show attended a roundup in the South St. Paul high school last night. Governor Theodore Christianson was the principal speaker. He said that industrial expansion at the expense of agriculture had caused economic maladjustment and that only when the farmers' economic status was improved would the country's outlook be bettered.

Expression's Origin

Few people know what they mean when they assure their friends that they "slept like a top." Top, in this instance, is a corruption of the word "taupe" as used in the French expression, "Il dort comme un taupe," i. e., "He sleeps like a mole." Taupe is used in English now for mole color.

Dame Fashion Smiles

By Grace Jewett Austin

Grace J. Austin.

Very soon after Eve began to manufacture her leafy costumes in the neighborhood of the Garden of Eden it probably happened that she took long, wiry strands of grass, used thorns for needles and strung herself some garlands of beads from red berries. There is no other way to account for the deep and inborn instinct for beads that remains in all strata of the human race of womenfolk.

Men know this quite well—indeed, it is not so many months since a young man looked at Dame Fashion in amazement and said in reply to her question, "Why do you have to get pearls?"—"Why, a man couldn't get married without giving the bride a string of pearls!"

Of late the pretty spoils brought back from Europe by several returning travelers have been viewed, and with old and young, beads form a noteworthy part of the purchases. There is a classic early-American touch about them, too. Dame Fashion recently visited an encampment of Winnebagoes, and of course, came away with a necklace of small shells!

Hat, dress and shoes form the great triumvirate of importance in a woman's garb with beads, purse and gloves for a close second trio. Once upon a time Dame Fashion spent part of a summer in Gloucester on Cape Cod, where the fishing vessels bring in fish for half the country's codfish balls. She saw plenty of the hats that for long years have been found best suited to the needs of these fishermen—"sou'westers" or "nor'westers," as you choose. The principle is the same that a cape down over the back of the neck keeps out the brine of the salt sea and the onslaught of the winds.

Pretty ladies are not often exposed to brine and North Atlantic gales, but their soft transparent velvet hats of the season have the sou'western capes that were fathered by the sailors' wear. Dame Fashion saw a recent bride with such a brown-caped velvet hat—"It's the most comfortable hat I ever had on my head," she declared.

Dame Fashion has to admit that in travels around the shops at present there is a great deal more of brown to be viewed than there is of her favorite red. But red will cheerfully bide its time, and one of these days come forging to the front again. In the early autumn Dame Fashion saw many politically-minded women, even candidates for distinguished office, and their garb was usually strictly tailor-made and in colors so somber that on a platform they looked darker and severer in attire than the men beside them. Dame Fashion did quite a bit of pondering on what would be the result if a political woman adopted red for her attire. Opinions will differ, but at least such wear would add to the cheerfulness of a platform.

One of the most curious materials of which Dame Fashion ever heard for dresses—and between sacking, mosquito netting and bunny fur, she has heard of a few queer ones—is what Paris is said to approve: "tarred tulle"—tulle dotted with little drops of black tar which give the air of black spangles under a bright light. All of these dotted effects are somewhat akin. When polka dots are good in summer, the winter is quite likely to bring sequins and spangles and beaded effects. Style is a pretty good cousin of the leopard; it believes in spots of color.

ASK MARRIED WOMEN IN COMPANY EMPLOY TO RESIGN JOBS

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 12.—(UP)—The Laclede Gas Light Co. today posted notices requesting all married women in the firm's employ to resign, as a measure to relieve unemployment.

Only 20 or more women will be affected by the order, it was said, out of 400 employees.

An official of the company said "we're not going to throw anybody out today or tomorrow, but we are letting the matter work itself out. The women themselves feel that it is just."

"Before we discharge anyone, we will investigate to determine that the husbands are working—if not they stay."

Vegetable Fibers

An authority suggests the following order for vegetable fibers: Abaca, henquin, ixtle, ramie, hemp. For animal hairs Matthews gives the following order of strengths for equal cross sections: Alpaca, Saxony merino, mohair, Northumberland, Australian merino.

Elephants Capable of Speed When Infuriated

Cooper's "Lions 'N Tigers 'N Everything," mentions that "the speed of an elephant is a deceptive thing, and it is a good horse that can keep abreast of him, once he unlimbers into full steam ahead." Jennings' "Natural History of Animals," states that "the usual gait is a walk, but when frightened they break into an amble by which they can cover 10 miles an hour for a long period." An article by F. C. Selous in "The Living Animals of the World," says as follows: "That great authority, Mr. Sanderson, says that the only pace of the Indian elephant is the walk, capable of being increased to a fast shuffle of about 15 miles an hour for very short distances. This description exactly coincides with my own experience of the African elephant, except that I think that animals of the latter species, especially cows and young bulls, are capable of getting up a pace of at least 20 miles an hour and keeping it up for from 100 to 200 yards when charging." These statements would indicate that a charging elephant can outrun all but the fastest of human runners.

Aim of Pioneers Was Destruction of Forest

Our forefathers thought not so much of the utilization as of the destruction of the forests. They wanted to get rid of them. For two centuries little progress was made in this struggle with the all-encompassing forest. The total forest volume was almost as great a hundred years ago as it was when the Cavaliers of Virginia and the Puritans of Massachusetts were first awed by the dark and mysterious woods which, so far as they knew, stretched continuously to the Pacific, thousands of miles to the west. The only extensive cleared areas were on the Atlantic seaboard. The old-time water-power driven sawmill had made but little headway against the incredible vastness of the forests and their sturdy and tenacious ability to reproduce themselves. The forests of Maine, prized two centuries ago as the source of huge masts and spars for the king's navy, have now their fourth crop of saw timber.

Needle 25,000 Years Old

A perfect bone needle, some 25,000 years old, is in the Field Museum of Natural History, Chicago. This needle, more than three inches in length, is complete and has as perfect an eye as if it had been made yesterday. It was made by a prehistoric Magdalenian craftsman, according to Henry Field, assistant curator of physical anthropology, and it was undoubtedly used for making clothes out of reindeer skins.

doubtedly used for making clothes out of reindeer skins.

The needle was excavated from an ancient rock shelter at Ganties in the south of France. It was evidently fashioned with a flint blade and drilled by a flint borer.

Garden of Straw Hats

In almost every other part of the world where straw hats are made, the process of bleaching is accomplished by the use of chemicals, but in Luton, England, which boasts of a great straw hat industry, the hats are bleached by exposure to the sun's rays. A large open space attached to the factory is filled with regularly planted sticks, and upon each of these a straw hat in the process of making is placed for a specified time, during which the whitening operation takes place in a natural manner. The bleaching department with its rows of hats has the appearance of a garden filled with great white blooms.

A Poet at 8

Oliver Goldsmith, before he was eight years old, had contracted the habit of scribbling verse on small scraps of paper, which, in a little while, he would throw into the fire. A few of these verses, however, were rescued from the flames and taken to his mother. She read them with a mother's delight, and saw at once that her son was a genius and a poet. From that time she beset her husband with solicitations to give the boy an education suitable to his talents.

Egyptian Mummification

Egypt owed its scientific advance before other nations to the Nile. Its dead could not be buried in the loose alluvial soil disturbed every year by the floods. Tombs were hollowed out of the hills, until their whole surfaces were honeycombed by them. To tide their dead over the weeks of the high water, their bodies were carefully embalmed and this grew to be a custom until not only people, but even favorite animals (especially cats) were converted into mummies.

No Loss

When Mary Louise visited in the country her aunt gave her a live rooster to bring home. Several weeks later her aunt visited Mary Louise's mother.

"Did you eat the rooster I gave you?" her aunt asked.

"No; he ran away," said Mary Louise. "But he was so old and tough we never would have eaten him, anyway."

Are Jailed as Hip Pocket Liquor Smugglers

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 12.—(UP)—Two former officials of Hamtramck, Detroit suburb, were jailed today as hip pocket liquor smugglers.

The men were Dr. Theodore Dysarz, 42, recently defeated candidate for mayor of Hamtramck, and Stanley J. Pocholek, 59, and undertaker and former police commissioner of the suburban town.

They were arrested, according to Customs Inspector Frank Nisula, when they resisted attempts of customs officers stationed at the Ambassador bridge to search their pockets. The officers said they felt bulges, which the doctor and his companion first protested were "ketchup bottles," Nisula said.

Hip smugglers are rarely arrested here. Customs officers usually confiscate the liquor and fine the smuggler $5 a bottle.

Tickets to be honored in tourist sleeping cars upon payment of the sleeping car rate will be sold at a reduction of a little more than 18 per cent. This is the first announcement of reduced railroad rates from Chicago to the north Pacific coast.

Are Jailed as Hip Pocket Liquor Smugglers

Detroit, Mich., Nov. 12.—(UP)—Two former officials of Hamtramck, Detroit suburb, were jailed today as hip pocket liquor smugglers. The men were Dr. Theodore Dysarz, 42, recently defeated candidate for mayor of Hamtramck, and Stanley J. Pocholek, 59, and undertaker and former police commissioner of the suburban town.

They were arrested, according to Customs Inspector Frank Nisula, when they resisted attempts of customs officers stationed at the Ambassador bridge to search their pockets. The officers said they felt bulges, which the doctor and his companion first protested were "ketchup bottles," Nisula said.

Hip smugglers are rarely arrested here. Customs officers usually confiscate the liquor and fine the smuggler $5 a bottle.

Popular Scottish Dish

ASK MARRIED WOMEN IN COMPANY EMPLOY TO RESIGN JOBS

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 12.—(UP)—The Laclede Gas Light Co. today posted notices requesting all married women in the firm's employ to resign, as a measure to relieve unemployment.

Only 20 or more women will be affected by the order, it was said, out of 400 employees.

An official of the company said "we're not going to throw anybody out today or tomorrow, but we are letting the matter work itself out. The women themselves feel that it is just."

"Before we discharge anyone, we will investigate to determine that the husbands are working—if not they stay."

Vegetable Fibers

An authority suggests the following order for vegetable fibers: Abaca, henquin, ixtle, ramie, hemp. For animal hairs Matthews gives the following order of strengths for equal cross sections: Alpaca, Saxony merino, mohair, Northumberland, Australian merino.

Elephants Capable of Speed When Infuriated

Cooper's "Lions 'N Tigers 'N Everything," mentions that "the speed of an elephant is a deceptive thing, and it is a good horse that can keep abreast of him, once he unlimbers into full steam ahead." Jenkinson's "Natural History of Animals," states that "the usual gait is a walk, but when frightened they break into an amble by which they can cover 10 miles an hour for a long period." An article by F. C. Selous in "The Living Animals of the World," says as follows: "That great authority, Mr. Sanderson, says that the only pace of the Indian elephant is the walk, capable of being increased to a fast shuffle of about 15 miles an hour for very short distances. This description exactly coincides with my own experience of the African elephant, except that I think that animals of the latter species, especially cows and young bulls, are capable of getting up a pace of at least 20 miles an hour and keeping it up for from 100 to 200 yards when charging." These statements would indicate that a charging elephant can outrun all but the fastest of human runners.

Aim of Pioneers Was Destruction of Forest

Our forefathers thought not so much of the utilization as of the destruction of the forests. They wanted to get rid of them. For two centuries little progress was made in this struggle with the all-encompassing forest. The total forest volume was almost as great a hundred years ago as it was when the Cavaliers of Virginia and the Puritans of Massachusetts were first awed by the dark and mysterious woods which, so far as they knew, stretched continuously to the Pacific. Thousands of miles to the west. The only extensive cleared areas were on the Atlantic seaboard. The old-time water-power driven sawmill had made but little headway against the incredible vastness of the forests and their sturdy and tenacious ability to reproduce themselves. The forests of Maine, prized two centuries ago as the source of huge masts and spars for the king's navy, have now their fourth crop of saw timber.

Needle 25,000 Years Old

A perfect bone needle, some 25,000 years old, is in the Field Museum of Natural History, Chicago. This needle, more than three inches in length, is complete and has as perfect an eye as if it had been made yesterday. It was made by a prehistoric Magdalenian craftsman, according to Henry Field, assistant curator of physical anthropology, and it was undoubtedly used for making clothes out of reindeer skins.

doubtedly used for making clothes out of reindeer skins.

The needle was excavated from an ancient rock shelter at Ganties in the south of France. It was evidently fashioned with a flint blade and drilled by a flint borer.

Garden of Straw Hats

In almost every other part of the world where straw hats are made, the process of bleaching is accomplished by the use of chemicals, but in Luton, England, which boasts of a great straw hat industry, the hats are bleached by exposure to the sun's rays. A large open space attached to the factory is filled with regularly planted sticks, and upon each of these a straw hat in the process of making is placed for a specified time, during which the whitening operation takes place in a natural manner. The bleaching department with its rows of hats has the appearance of a garden filled with great white blooms.

A Poet at 8

Oliver Goldsmith, before he was eight years old, had contracted the habit of scribbling verse on small scraps of paper, which, in a little while, he would throw into the fire. A few of these verses, however, were rescued from the flames and taken to his mother. She read them with a mother's delight, and saw at once that her son was a genius and a poet. From that time she beset her husband with solicitations to give the boy an education suitable to his talents.

Egyptian Mummification

Egypt owed its scientific advance before other nations to the Nile. Its dead could not be buried in the loose alluvial soil disturbed every year by the floods. Tombs were hollowed out of the hills, until their whole surfaces were honeycombed by them. To tide their dead over the weeks of the high water, their bodies were carefully embalmed and this grew to be a custom until not only people, but even favorite animals (especially cats) were converted into mummies.

No Loss

When Mary Louise visited in the country her aunt gave her a live rooster to bring home. Several weeks later her aunt visited Mary Louise's mother.

"Did you eat the rooster I gave you?" her aunt asked.

"No," he ran away," said Mary Louise. "But he was so old and tough we never would have eaten him, anyway."

Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 12.—(U.P.)—The eighteenth amendment was characterized as the "greatest moral reform for the century" by Louis J. Taber, master of the National Grange, which opened its annual convention here today.

He asserted that the amendment must be upheld, and charged that forces working for repeal "are actuated by mercenary motives."

"Restoring the tax on liquor," Taber said, "might reduce taxes on incomes, and a look behind the scenes indicates this to be one of the chief reasons why millions are being spent to promote the wet cause."

He asserted the Grange "stands absolutely dry and will mobilize all its mighty energies back of prohibition and increasingly rigid enforcement."

"JUDY" By Winifred Van Duzer

A WEEK aboard the S. S. Mohawk has changed Judith Archer from a serious-minded, unromantic school teacher into a care-free, pleasure-loving young woman. She receives the attentions of Kit Camp, the ship's radio operator, and Tris Millet, fascinating figure of mystery, while her mother is attracted by a Mr. Tennant. Shortly after reading of the robbery of the famous Ballard emeralds, Judy sees Tris talking with a scar-faced man, whom he previously denied knowing. Questioned regarding his work, Tris becomes vague. That night, while they are strolling on deck, a man attacks Tris.

CHAPTER XX.

"TRIS! He—he might have killed you! Jumping out of the darkness. Oh, never forget that—seeing you fall back. He wished to kill you. I felt this." She shivered, and he put his hand beneath her chin, raised her face so that even in the semi-darkness she could see the depths in his eyes. "Judy—you were afraid for me? You've known me only a little while—still you mean this?"

She felt his charm stealing through her, kindling a wild joy in her heart. "Of course, Tris. Little more than a whisper that was." "You knew this; you are so wise—"

"Not wise enough for that, my sweet. Half a lifetime since any one cared what happened to me."

He said this almost gaily, winking no sympathy, yet it disturbed her, filling her with a sense of sadness which seemed some way to hover about him. He held her off a little way, laughed, drew her close all in a rush, set a garland of kisses across her forehead, her temples, her blowing hair.

And now she wondered how she ever could think him sad. Dazzled—ah, the vital exultation of him! And he liked her, a girl with "no nonsense about her"—almost she could hear Mrs. Rowe saying that.

Or was she the other Judy, and this just a dream? She put up a hand, drew it along his face; laughed when it proved to be real.

He took her inside, found a deserted corner of the library; they sat there close together at one end of a divan.

He would not report the sailor. "What's the good, Judy—my Judy? Fellow thought I was someone else. Didn't mind—I like a fight. You noticed how fast he beat it when he saw his mistake."

"But—but he didn't! Tris—something about this; you're thinking I'll be afraid—something you don't wish me to know."

"As if that could be possible!" He laughed and teased her. "Let's sleep tonight as it is, Judy. Happy—gorgeous night. Not land some poor devil of a deck hand into a jam."

She agreed to this finally, half her thought on what had happened in Halifax. No use telling Tris the sailor was in the lane there; he would laugh at this, too, brush it away. What was the mystery?

Well—try to forget it tonight. Romance was a living glory now, not a flame that fell into ashes when the cover of a book was dropped. Life in this—in tonight!

It was after one when they crossed the lounge, loitering at every step, drawing the time out as far as it would go.

Kit Camp waited at the top of the companionway, watching them. He called a greeting and waved as they turned into the corridor.

But there had been a flash in his green eyes; it went cutting through Judy's exuberance, made her heart miss a beat.

Peggy was reading in bed, elbows propped on pillows against the rolling of the ship, an empty chocolate pot on the night table.

Now she glanced up quickly, saw Judy's face—the light that seemed to shimmer all about her—thought with a pang: "I wished this—desired life for her. Color, beauty, love. The tall boy with the quiet eyes. She would find calm with him, the holy peace of a shrine. Or the other? No serenity for her there. He might give the throbbing heart of life into her hands—never long, white, gentle hours."

"But after—ah, yes, after all—"

Peggy's code permitted no interference. "What if Judy is my girl?" she once said to Mrs. Rowe.

"Children are individuals first—sons and daughters afterward. We have police protection, but what's to protect the privacy of children from the depredations of their savage parents? Let them shape their own lives; it's their right."

The old memory floated through her mind now, this and Mrs. Rowe's sniff, as Judy paused with her back to the door, a misty sweetness in her face.

"I've kept you awake, mother? Or is it that you have a scolding handy for the gallivanting and her scandalous hours?"

"I'd be more likely to have a pat ready, baby." The radiance of her caught Peggy's heart, made her wish to enfold the girl as when she was a tiny thing, say coaxingly, "Is it love, dear? Or just a small flame to light a Summer's vacation?"

But she never could ask a confidence not first offered. She returned to her novel and over the pages watched Judy remove the Dreaden Shepherdess frock, draw her hand down the folds in a tender way, linger before the mirror running the comb through her hair, pausing sometimes with her arm in mid-air to smile, to flush rose red give her head a shake.

Once she frowned and Peggy thought, "It doesn't run smoothly? Obstacles? But you don't know the whirlpools yet, my dear, nor the Niagara drop of parting—"

But Judy was not thinking of love; she was remembering the flash in Kit Camp's eyes as he watched her and Tris from the top of the companionway. A mounting restlessness caught her when she recalled that look. How could he make her feel this way, dissatisfied somehow with all the glow? Not a disapproving scrutiny he had turned upon her; it was curious, almost as if he wished to say something—some tremendous thing she must hear.

She sat on the edge of the bed, saw again the hurricane deck. Kit Camp and herself rolled in blankets, stretched out side by side. Something merry and sweet about Kit Camp. Even when he grasped her wrists, looked down at her with straightened lips he was this. She had felt at her best with him—the best of the real Judy, so calm he was, so poised.

But he was sure of himself—high-handed. Superior male. She had forgotten this for a moment. Kit was the condescending male to the fingertips; a girl had to watch her step with one like him. Tris—lithe, sparkling, thing—only man in all her life who didn't rub up her antagonism.

An appealing youngness shook him sometimes. But he was restless, weary behind the smooth, laughing manner. Weary of many things—a boy in his twenties!

What was the mystery about Trisram Millet? Why did the sailor drop on him in the dark, fight so viciously? Did he mistake Tris for someone else? Tris had told her this but she did not believe it. And if it were not true—if the sailor knew Tris, meant to kill him, why then—

Why then Tris knew what had happened in Halifax!

She whispered "Yes!" in a little gasp, put her head down so Peggy would not see the sudden drawing of her features. What did she care because a shadow hovered over Tris? Why did she feel herself caught in a swinging lightness, tingling and sweet, when she remembered the feel of his kisses, his arms?

A sudden chill wound her heart. "Where does this take me?" she thought. "They say love begins this way. Girls let themselves be caught in the glamour. That's because they don't look ahead—because they think it always will be glamour—shine of a star, flash of a wave. They forget progress—what they are capable of—"

When she met Tris as she was walking around the deck next morning, lashed to a glow by the north wind, she was smiling, a bit tremulous but determined.

"Well, hello! Thought you never arose before noon? But perhaps you wanted to see this and that?"

"Wanted to see you, my sweet." He took her arm with a gray chuckle, drew her toward the rail. The ocean was a tumbling mass of drab and far to the northeast was a line of springing white against a bleak shore line. "Look, Judy—teeth of the sea. Gnawing at the rocks. Anticosti Island over there."

She turned her head and he bent down, brushed her cheek with his lips.

"That wasn't fair! You've no right, Tris."

"Haven't I? You don't believe that. Not after last night. You won't forget last night. I know this, Judy, that you're not one who forgets easily."

She leaned upon the rail, felt the sparkle creeping in her veins again. He had the power to do this to her; as well try to stop the rushing wind as stand here with him face to face and deny it.

"Tris," she said, suddenly, "tell me about you. Your home, your people. What things have been like for you. What you want. Meeting you this way is like a picture out of a frame; you've no way to tell what it might be. It's all a blur—"

"Oh—the frame is important?"

FIVE POLES IN ARCTIC REGIONS

Two of Them Still Attract Attention of Exploring Expeditions.

New York.—A Canadian flying expedition has just succeeded in charting with aerial cameras the north magnetic pole area, which was discovered by Capt. James Clark Ross in 1831 and relocated by Capt. Roald Amundsen, who made extensive observations from 1903 to 1905, just before finding the Northwest passage, says the New York Times.

There are five poles in the Arctic regions to stimulate the imagination of explorers. One is the North pole, visited by Peary, by Byrd and by the Amundsen-Ellsworth-Nobile expedition. Another is the magnetic pole. The third is the ice pole, known as the Pole of Inaccessibility until Amundsen, Ellsworth and Nobile flew over it in the dirigible Norge in 1926. There are also a wind pole and the pole of cold.

The wind pole may possibly be in Greenland, where British and German expeditions are now conducting meteorological observations. The pole of cold is still to be located definitely.

Some of these poles are shifting in character, though they can be placed fairly well upon maps. Of this type are the North pole and the magnetic north pole. The former, at the tip of the axis on which our earth rotates, moves about in a circle with a radius of 30 to 40 feet.

The Magnetic Pole.

The magnetic north pole, which attracts the needle of the compass because it is at the axis of the great electric dynamo constituting the earth, moves over a considerable area, slowly but measurably over a period of years. The position generally given is near Lat. 70 degrees N., Long. 97 degrees W., on the Canadian mainland at a place called Boothia Felix or Boothia peninsula. In summer this is a green and grassy lowland; in winter it is no longer green but has the appearance of a cold Dakota prairie. Many ships have visited the region, some coming to grief on jagged rocks just below the surface of the Gulf of Boothia.

The ice pole, so named by Amundsen because the term "Pole of Inaccessibility" no longer applied when he crossed it by dirigible, lies between the North pole and the Alaskan shore, forming a rough triangle with that pole and the magnetic pole. It is at the center of the great field of floating ice, covering 1,000,000 square miles, on which the North pole lies.

Location of Ice Pole.

Because the warmth of the Gulf stream clears the ocean of ice to within 600 or 700 miles of the North pole on the Norwegian side, the center of the ice mass—and hence the location of the ice pole—is 400 miles away from the North pole on the Alaskan side. When Amundsen passed over the ice pole he saw nothing below him but solid ice, so tightly packed that not even a rift of water appeared.

No man has ever set foot at the ice pole. The hardships of reaching it by sledge have been considered too great, and the Amundsen party reported that the condition of the ice was such as to prevent a landing by either dirigible or plane.

Yet, cold as this territory must be in the dead of winter, explorers do not believe that the temperature there, or at the North pole itself, ever falls to the level of 68 degrees below zero, once reached at the village of Gladstone, near Havre, Mont. To find the pole of cold, therefore, scientists must look elsewhere. In fact, they may have to look for two or more cold poles instead of one.

One pole of cold—that having the lowest winter temperature of which there is record—has been fixed tentatively on the mainland of Asia, near the Siberian village of Verkhoyansk, some 1,400 miles from the North pole. The coldest winter temperature that can ever occur there is something between 90 and 95 degrees below zero, while the coldest possible at either the North pole or the ice pole is believed to be about 30 degrees warmer.

High and Low Temperatures.

But in summer the temperature at Verkhoyansk sometimes rises to the 90s, once reaching 93, with plenty of humidity, and various cereals and vegetables can be cultivated in the region. So if the pole of cold is considered as that place having the lowest summer temperature or the lowest average temperature, it must be somewhere else upon the map.

In this connection it is suggested that certain northward-facing precipices in the Himalaya mountains might be the coldest all-year-round spots. They are far from the warm ocean and high above it, though not so very far from the Equator. If there are such places anywhere near the five-mile altitude on which the sun never strikes, they are likely to demand strong consideration as the pole of cold and may have a better claim than either of the poles lying at sea level in the Arctic.

Or perhaps the pole of cold is in Greenland, which may be every bit as cold in winter as Verkhoyansk. For the greatest winter cold is produced by three conditions working together—distance from the Equator, distance from the ocean, and altitude. The plateau of central Greenland answers all of these conditions, whereas the North pole and the ice pole meet only the first—distance from the Equator. Perhaps the German and British meteorologists now in Greenland may be able to learn definitely whether that ice-bound island contains both the pole of cold and the somewhat legendary pole of winds.

Survey Greenland Ice Cap.

The British expedition is engaged in surveying the ice cap of Greenland, with a view to determining whether it would be possible to use the island as a way station for airships used on the proposed route between Britain and Canada, and the German expedition is also acquiring meteorological data relative to flying as well as to storm conditions in the transatlantic ship lanes.

By pole of winds is meant that center—if there is only one—where the chill winds of the Northern Hemisphere originate. Scientists refuse to credit the polar regions with as many icy blasts as the poets suggest. There is in Greenland, however, a peculiar situation which makes it possible for scientists to discuss whether there is a sort of wind pole there. The island is cold, particularly in the interior, and has a hump on its back near the center. The air undoubtedly becomes very cold and thin, some experts say. It would, therefore, have a tendency to settle down upon the dome of interior Greenland and flow down hill in every direction, as water does when poured on an inverted bowl. The result might be that there would usually be little wind near the center of Greenland's dome and frequent winds blowing from the interior to the coasts. Such winds, of course, would contribute to the interacting system of winds throughout the Northern Hemisphere and hence would be highly important to meteorology.

Cow Defeats Goat in Mountain Climb Test

Tokyo.—That sturdy horned ruminant, the goat, which is in its element scaling scraggy heights, is not as good a mountain climber as the indolent domesticated cow.

This was proven beyond all doubt in one of the most novel contests staged here in which two cows, two goats, a donkey, and two pigs raced up Fujiyama, Japan's sacred mount.

Interest in the "nonsense" race was national, the vernacular papers reporting the event more fully than the London arms conference. So intense was the excitement that 10,000 persons scaled Mount Fuji on the day of the race to follow the bleating, snorting, grunting creatures.

The donkey won the 12,365-foot trek. His time was 7 hours and 15 minutes. The cows lumbered to the summit 5 minutes later, while the goats, on whom the populace had placed their bets, failed to make the grade the first day. After a night's rest they scrambled to the goal in 9 hours and 5 minutes of actual traveling time.

The two corpulent members of the porcine family, grunting and snorting, also took two days.

Budapest, Hungary.—Adherents of telepathy societies in Hungary were recently given a pleasant surprise by Dr. Adelbert Kolarits, a government official. While spending his vacation in Denmark, so he stated on arrival home, Doctor Kolarits suddenly had the feeling that his brother in Budapest needed him and took the first train back to Hungary.

Actually, on the day of Doctor Kolarits' arrival Budapest a physician who had been treating the brother for blood poisoning for two days decided that a blood transfusion was necessary. This blood Doctor Kolarits supplied.

She apparently had committed suicide.

Her husband, Grant Dazey, said she had been humiliated by the suit and since its filing had been despondent.

"UDY" By Winifred Van Duzer

A WEEK aboard the S. S. Mohawk has changed Judith Archer from a serious-minded, unromantic school teacher into a care-free, pleasure-loving young woman. She receives the attentions of Kit Camp, the ship's radio operator, and Tris Millet, fascinating figure of mystery, while her mother is attracted by a Mr. Tennant. Shortly after reading of the robbery of the famous Ballard emeralds, Judy sees Tris talking with a scar-faced man, whom he previously denied knowing. Questioned regarding his work, Tris becomes vague. That night, while they are strolling on deck, a man attacks Tris.

CHAPTER XX.

"TRIS! He—He might have killed you! Jumping out of the darkness. Oh, never forget that—seeing you fall back. He wished to kill you. I felt this. She shivered, and he put his hand beneath her chin, raised her face so that even in the semi-darkness she could see the depths in his eyes. 'Judy—you were afraid for me? You've known me only a little while—still you mean this?' She felt his charm stealing through her, kindling a wild joy in her heart. 'Of course, Tris, Little more than a whisper that was. 'You knew this; you are so wise—'

"Not wise enough for that, my sweet. Half a lifetime since any one cared what happened to me. He said this almost gaily, winking no sympathy, yet it disturbed her, filling her thought with the sadness which seemed some way to hover about him. He held her off a little way, laughed, drew her close all in a rush, set a garland of kisses across her forehead, her temples, her blowing hair.

And now she wondered how she ever could think him so. A haze of ment—ah, the vital exultation of him! As he liked her, a girl with 'no nonsense about her'—almost she could hear Mrs. Rowe saying that.

Or was she the other Judy, and this just a dream? She put up a hand, drew it along his face; laughed when it proved to be real. He took her inside, found a deserted corner of the library; they sat there close together at one end of a divan.

He would not report the sailor. 'What's the good, Judy—my Judy? Fallow thought I was someone else. Didn't mind—I like a fight. You noticed how fast he beat it when he saw his mistake.'

"But—but he didn't! Tris—something about this; you're thinking I'll be afraid—something you don't wish me to know." "As if that could be possible!" He laughed and teased her. "Let's sleep tonight as it is, Judy. Happy—gorgeous night. Not land some poor devil of a deck hand into a jam."

She agreed to this finally, half her thought on what had happened in Halifax. No use telling Tris the sailor was in the lane there; he would laugh at this, too, brush it away. What was the mystery? Well—try to forget it tonight. Romance was a living glory now, not a flame that fell into ashes when the cover of a book was dropped. Live in this—in tonight!

It was after one when they crossed the lounge, loitering at every step, drawing the time out as far as it would go. Kit Camp waited at the top of the companionway, watching them. He called a greeting and waved as they turned into the corridor.

But there had been a flash in his green eyes; it went cutting through Judy's exuberance, made her heart miss a beat. Peggy was reading in bed, elbows propped on pillows against the rolling of the ship, an empty chocolate pot on the night table. Now she glanced up quickly, saw Judy's face—the light that seemed to shimmer all about her—thought with a pang: "I wished this—desired life for her. Color, beauty, love. The tall boy with the quiet eyes? She would find calm with him, the holy peace of a shrine. Or the other? No serenity for her there. He might give the throbbing heart of life into her hands—never long, white, gentle hours.

"But after—ah, yes, after all—Peggy's code permitted no interference. 'What if Judy is my girl?' she once said to Mrs. Rowe. Children are individuals first—sons and daughters afterward. We have police protection, but what's to protect the privacy of children from the depredations of their savage parents? Let them shape their own lives; it's their right."

The old memory floated through her mind now, this and Mrs. Rowe's sniff, as Judy paused with her back to the door, a misty sweetness in her face. "I've kept you awake, mother? Or is it that you have a scolding handy for the gallivanting gal and her scandalous hours?"

"I'd be more likely to have a pat ready, baby." The radiance of her caught Peggy's heart, made her wish to enfold the girl as when she was a tiny thing, say coaxingly. "Is it love, dear? Or just a small flame to light a Summer's vacation?"

But she never could ask a confidence not first offered. She returned to her novel and over the pages watched Judy remove the Dresden Shepherdess frock, draw her hand down the folds in a tender way, finger before the mirror running the comb through her hair, pausing sometimes with her arm in mid-air to smile, to flush rose red glow her head a shake.

Once she frowned and Peggy thought, "It doesn't run smoothly? Obstacles? But you don't know the whirlpools yet, my dear, nor the Niagara drop of parting—"

But Judy was not thinking of love; she was remembering the flash in Kit Camp's eyes as he watched her and Tris from the top of the companionway. A mounting restlessness caught her when she recalled that look. How could he make her feel this way, disquieted somehow with all the glow? Not a disapproving scrutiny he had turned upon her; it was curious, almost as if he wished to say something—some tremendous thing she must hear.

She sat on the edge of the bed, saw again the hurricane deck. Kit Camp and herself rolled in blankets, stretched out side by side. Something merry and sweet about Kit Camp. Even when he grasped her wrists, looked down at her with straightened lips he was this. She had felt at her best with him—the best of the real Judy, so calm he was, so poised.

But he was sure of himself—high-handed. Superior male. She had forgotten this for a moment. Kit was the condescending male to the fingertips; a girl had to watch her step with one like him. Tris—lithe, sparkling, thing—only man in all her life who didn't rub up her antagonism.

An appealing youngness shook him sometimes. But he was restless, weary behind the smooth, laughing manner. Weary of many things—a boy in his twenties!

What was the mystery about Trisram Millet? Why did the sailor drop on him in the dark, fight so viciously? Did he mistake Tris for someone else? Tris had told her this but she did not believe it. And if it were not true—if the sailor knew Tris, meant to kill him, why then—

Why then Tris knew what had happened in Halifax? She whispered "Yes!" in a little gasp, put her head down so Peggy would not see the sudden drawing of her features. What did she care because a shadow hovered over Tris? Why did she feel herself caught in a swinging lightness, tingling and sweet, when she remembered the feel of his kisses, his arms?

A sudden chill wound her heart. "Where does this take me?" she thought. "They say love begins this way. Girls let themselves be caught in the glamour. That's because they don't look ahead—because they think it always will be glamour—shine of a star, flash of a wave. They forget progress—what they are capable of—"

When she met Tris as she was walking around the deck next morning, lashed to a glow by the north wind, she was smiling, a bit tremulous but determined. "Well, hello! Thought you never arose before noon? But perhaps you wanted to see this and that?"

"Wanted to see you, my sweet." He took her arm with a gay chuckle, drew her toward the rail. The ocean was a tumbling mass of drab and far to the northeast was a line of springing, white against a bleak shore line. "Look, Judy—teeth of the sea. Gnarling at the rocks. Anticosti Island over there."

She turned her head and he bent down, brushed her cheek with his lips. "That wasn't fair! You've no right, Tris."

"Haven't I? You don't believe that. Not after last night. I know this, Judy, that you're not one who forgets easily."

She leaned upon the rail, felt the sparkle creeping in her veins again. He had the power to do this to her; as well try to stop the rushing wind as stand here with him face to face and deny it.

"Tris," she said, suddenly, "tell me about you. Your home, your people. What things have been like for you. What you want. Meeting you this way is like a picture out of a frame; you've no way to tell what it might be. It's all a blur—"

"Oh—the frame is important?" (To Be Continued Tomorrow.)

FIVE POLES IN ARCTIC REGIONS

Two of Them Still Attract Attention of Exploring Expeditions.

New York.—A Canadian flying expedition has just succeeded in charting with aerial cameras the north magnetic pole area, which was discovered by Capt. James Clark Ross in 1831 and relocated by Capt. Roald Amundsen, who made extensive observations from 1903 to 1905, just before finding the Northwest passage, says the New York Times.

There are five poles in the Arctic regions to stimulate the imagination of explorers. One is the North pole, visited by Peary, by Byrd and by the Amundsen-Ellsworth-Nobile expedition. Another is the magnetic pole. The third is the ice pole, known as the Pole of Inaccessibility until Amundsen, Ellsworth and Nobile flew over it in the dirigible Norge in 1926. There are also a wind pole and the pole of cold.

The wind pole may possibly be in Greenland, where British and German expeditions are now conducting meteorological observations. The pole of cold is still to be located definitely.

Some of these poles are shifting in character, though they can be placed fairly well upon maps. Of this type are the North pole and the magnetic north pole. The former, at the tip of the axis on which our earth rotates, moves about in a circle with a radius of 30 to 40 feet.

The magnetic north pole, which attracts the needle of the compass because it is at the axis of the great electric dynamo constituting the earth, moves over a considerable area, slowly but measurably over a period of years. The position generally given is near Lat. 70 degrees N., Long. 97 degrees W., on the Canadian mainland at a place called Boothia Felix or Boothia peninsula. In summer this is a green and grassy lowland; in winter it is no longer green but has the appearance of a cold Dakota prairie.

Many ships have visited the region, some coming to grief on jagged rocks just below the surface of the Gulf of Boothia. The ice pole, so named by Amundsen because the term "Pole of Inaccessibility" no longer applied when he crossed it by dirigible, lies between the North pole and the Alaskan shore, forming a rough triangle with that pole and the magnetic pole. It is at the center of the great field of floating ice, covering 1,000,000 square miles, on which the North pole lies.

Location of Ice Pole. Because the warmth of the Gulf stream clears the ocean of ice to within 600 or 700 miles of the North pole on the Norwegian side, the center of the ice mass—and hence the location of the ice pole—is 400 miles away from the North pole on the Alaskan side. When Amundsen passed over the ice pole he saw nothing below him but solid ice, so tightly packed that not even a rift of water appeared.

No man has ever set foot at the ice pole. The hardships of reaching it by sledge have been considered too great, and the Amundsen party reported that the condition of the ice was such as to prevent a landing by either dirigible or plane.

Yet, cold as this territory must be in the dead of winter, explorers do not believe that the temperature there, or at the North pole itself, ever falls to the level of 68 degrees below zero, once reached at the village of Gladstone, near Havre, Mont. To find the pole of cold, therefore, scientists must look elsewhere. In fact, they may have to look for two or more cold poles instead of one.

The coldest winter temperature that can ever occur there is something between 90 and 95 degrees below zero, while the coldest possible at either the North pole or the ice pole is believed to be about 30 degrees warmer.
